Eastwood's next projects: Affordable housing and Angelina Jolie

By PAUL MILLER

HE TOOK the summer off after finishing two complicated movies in one year, but former Carmel Mayor Clint Eastwood is about to resume his role as one of Hollywood's hottest directors. And this time, he's making a thriller with perhaps the world's most controversial movie star.

Filming of "The Changeling," starring Angelina Jolie, begins in two weeks.

"I've never worked with her, but she's a very good actress and I think she's a very good choice for this role," Eastwood told The Pine Cone. "A lot of actresses were trying to get it."

The movie tells the story of a woman whose son disappears. When police find him and return him to his mother, the woman claims it's not the right boy.

Filming will be at various locations around Los Angeles and at Universal Studios. The producers are Ron Howard, Brian Grazer and Rob Lorenz. A release date has not been set.

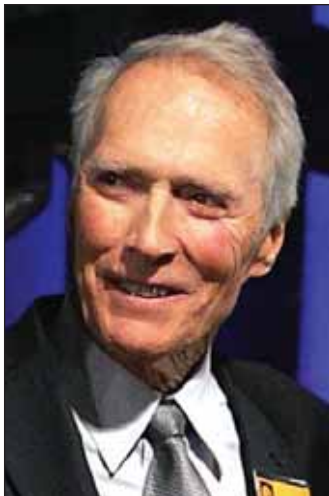

"It's a dark story but a very interesting story with a lot of intrigue," Eastwood said, "and it's a little different from what I've done before."

Eastwood, 77, has two Best Director Oscars — for "Unforgiven" (1992), a grim western, and "Million Dollar Baby" (2004), a love story set in the world of semi-professional boxing. His biggest fame as an actor came from action movies, such as "Dirty Harry," which was released in 1971.

That was also the year Eastwood launched his career as a director, with "Play Misty For Me" — a thriller filmed entirely on the Monterey Peninsula and featuring numerous local landmarks. It's currently being offered, along with several other Eastwood films, by Comcast's On Demand service. "I saw it again not too long ago and it's held up pretty well," Eastwood said.

Before heading to Los Angeles this week, Eastwood also confirmed he will be a principal in the Rancho Cañada Village housing project in Carmel Valley, which was launched by Nick Lombardo before his death in May 2005.

"There's always the dilemma of where to provide workforce housing," Eastwood said. "I was very conscious of it when I was mayor, and it's even worse now, with a lot of people who work on the Monterey Peninsula driving from places like Soledad."

He said the Rancho Cañada project might result in less traffic on local roads as people who live there are relieved of their long commutes. Water for the 280-unit project will come from a reduction of water use on the Rancho Cañada golf course.

The latest general plan being considered by the county might make it difficult to build the Rancho Cañada project, Eastwood acknowledged. Two weeks ago, his business associate, Alan Williams, asked the board of supervisors to leave the door open for the project as the county works on GPU5.

Affordable units in the Rancho Cañada project, including 140 apartments and townhouses, would be subsidized by market-rate homes.

"It's something I will be proud to invest in," Eastwood said.

RATEPAYER ADVOCATES PROPOSE CHEAPER WATER PLAN

■ Treated sewage could become part of Peninsula's supply

By KELLY NIX

A GROUP that advises the California Public Utilities Commission has proposed a water supply for the Monterey Peninsula it says will cost $100 million less than California American Water Company's desal plant.

"The thought was, are there any other local alternatives that could be implemented faster, cost less and have fewer environmental concerns?" said Keith Israel, director of the Monterey Regional Water Pollution Control Agency and a member of the Regional Project Technical Work Group appointed by the PUC Division of Ratepayer Advocates. "That is how this process started."

The new plan — called the "regional urban water supply evaluation" — was drawn up to identify the best and cheapest water solution for the Monterey Peninsula as an alternative to Cal Am's proposed Coastal Water Project, which will cost about $230 million.

The new plan would provide from 12,500 to 28,400 acre-feet of water per year, according to its creators.

"We took every project that agencies in Monterey have looked at at some point in the past," said Steve Kasower, senior research economist with University of California Santa Cruz Center for Integrated Water Research, and a consultant to the DRA, "and we stuck some of them together."

Although the plan calls for a bulk of the Peninsula's water to come from a desalination plant, the plant would be smaller than the one proposed by Cal Am. Combining a small desal plant and several other projects would be less expensive to local ratepayers and be less controversial, Kasower said. Although not any one of the components on its own would be able to supply the Peninsula

Second story removed, but neighbor says house is still too big

By MARY BROWNFIELD

EVEN THOUGH Rick Kashfi decided to lop off the second story of the home he plans to build at the southeast corner of San Antonio and 10th, neighbors still objected at last week's Carmel Design Review Board meeting. But the board, which had approved the original two-story proposal that was overturned by the city council in August, decided he had conceded enough and again voted in his favor.

After the council sent him back to the drawing board with a request to minimize the impacts on neighbors by reconfiguring the second story, changing the roof pitch and height, and excavating to lower the entire home's position on the property, designer Darren Davis drafted plans for a new 2,460-square-foot, one-story, U-shaped home. Stucco-sided with a cedar-shake roof, it would contain four bedrooms, three bathrooms, an attached

Renegade Shakespeare scholars convene

By CHRIS COUNTS

THE BIGGEST controversy in the history of literature is coming to town this weekend.

For the third time in the event's 32-year history, Carmel will host the Shakespeare Authorship Conference, a gathering of scholars, history buffs and literary detectives dedicated to debunking the idea that William Shakespeare actually penned the works attributed to him.

"There is definitely reason to doubt that Shakespeare wrote the plays," explained Stephen Moorer, PacRep Theatre's creative director and a leading debunker who played a big role in bringing the event to Carmel. "And there is so little that is known about the man, it just fuels the debate."

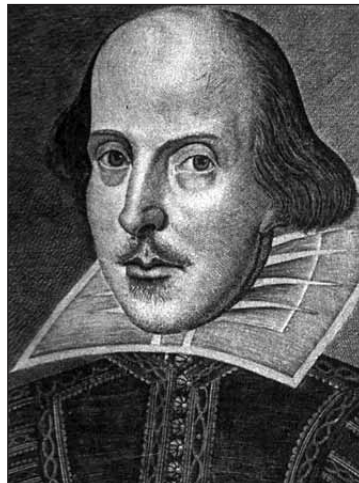

In the world of Shakespeare scholarship, those who question the traditional view of the author are often called anti-Stratfordians, a reference to Stratford-upon-Avon, the writer's alleged hometown. They believe the true author of Shakespeare's works was an aristocrat or, perhaps, a group of aristocrats. Moorer believes it would be impossible for a man from Shakespeare's humble origins to have such uncanny insight into the world of the privileged and the titled.

"In Shakespeare's work, there is such realism and depth in the aristocratic characters," Moorer said. "The peasants often come across as fools. They have funny names and they're the subject of ridicule. When they're portrayed as a mob, they're a threat. That's a very aristocratic attitude."

Anti-Stratfordians offer several leading candidates as the true author or authors of Shakespeare's work — Francis Bacon, Christopher Marlowe and Edward de Vere, the 17th Earl of Oxford. De Vere is considered such a popular candidate that he has inspired his own sub-genre of anti-Stratfordians known as Oxfordians.

"His life's story reads just like Hamlet's," Moorer insisted.

COUNCIL GRANTS SHOPPERS, DINERS MORE TICKET-FREE TIME DOWNTOWN

By MARY BROWNFIELD

PEOPLE OFTEN complain about parking in Carmel. Ninety minutes is not enough time ... $30 overtime tickets are a drag ... sometimes it takes 15 minutes just to find a spot.

At the recommendation of police chief George Rawson, the city council decided Tuesday night at least one of those annoyances should change. The 90-minute limit imposed downtown will grow by 30 minutes, and some of the half-hour green zones will also become two-hour spots. The extended limits could be in place in time for holiday shopping.

"In my six years here, I can't tell you how many complaints I've gotten regarding the time limits," Rawson told the council Oct. 2. "Ninety minutes is just not time to properly patronize downtown Carmel."

A survey revealed the business district contains about 1,790 marked parking spaces, 1,284 subjected to time limits. Of those, 773 are 90-minute zones, and 113 are 30-minute green zones. The change would affect all the 90-minute spots and a handful of half-hour spaces, and Rawson estimated the cost of replacing the signs at $15,450.

Councilwoman Paula Hazdovac, who sits on the city's traffic/parking committee with resident Carl Iverson and design review board member Michael Lynch, said merchants complained the 90-minute time restrictions scaring "all the visitors and residents away from the downtown area."

"That's where the idea [of extending the parking limits] came from," Hazdovac said. In addition, green zones often go unused, possibly "because we don't have as many resident-serving businesses as we used to, so there's not as much need to run in for a quick 15-minute errand."

Carmel Chamber of Commerce CEO Monta Potter said she told member businesses about the possible change and reported no objections.

"People vote with their feet, and there are not many people here to protest this," she pointed out.

The downside could be reduced turnover, according to Potter, who said the need remains for a garage, a shuttle service or some other means of providing more parking.

But resident parking passes will still have the same time limits

Will GPS help?

The increase would also allow people who work downtown to occupy valuable spots for longer, complained Meredith Crowell, who owns Linens & Such at San Carlos and Eighth. Mayor Sue McCloud said a study several years ago revealed business owners and workers took up 700 spaces in the business district that could have been used by shoppers.

"People need to be hammered over the head to get their employees to stop parking in the downtown area," commented Alex Heid, who handles advertising for Pebble Beach Magazine and GuestLife-Monterey Bay.

Michael Adamson, businessman and chairman of the chamber board, said he required his new employees at Monterey County Bank to sign an agreement pledging they would not use timed spots.

"There's plenty of parking in this town. It's the responsibility of the merchants to find parking so they can free up parking for paying customers," added Hazdovac, who owns a store on Dolores Street with her sister. "People feel they are entitled to park in front of their businesses, and then they are the first to complain they don't have any business."

McCloud and Rawson speculated the problem might dissipate with the introduction of new enforcement technology. In June, the council voted to spend more than $70,000 on a parking-patrol unit that uses cameras and a GPS system to determine whether a car has been parked overtime.

They wouldn't say exactly when the high-tech cart will hit

Did you know...

California farmers and ranchers are famous for their willingness to innovate - as in, for instance, their recent advances in organic farming. Some of the roots of this taste for experiment can be found in Carmel Valley, in the 19th century, in the person of Edward Berwick, one of the key agriculturalists in the history of the state. London-born, Berwick arrived in the valley in the late 1860s, at a time when wildcats still prowled and the occasional grizzly bear passed through. He bought a 120-acre tract for $500 and launched experimental farming endeavors, including the resurrection of the Winter Nelis pear, a forgotten varietal from the mission era. The Berwick Orchard became "world famous," writes historian Augusta Fink, and Berwick's pears were coveted by the crowned heads of Europe. His success attracted other innovative growers to the valley, as well as the state. (Next week: The Great Julia Platt.)

Tipsy man gets police ride to work

HERE'S A look at some of the significant calls logged by the Carmel-by-the-Sea Police Department, the Carmel Fire Department and the Monterey County Sheriff's Office last week. This week's log was compiled by Mary Brownfield.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 22

Carmel-by-the-Sea: Fire engine and ambulance responded to a fire alarm activation at Lincoln and Seventh at the Cypress Inn. Upon arrival, the hotel staff was in the process of evacuating the building and did not silence the alarm prior to the arrival of fire personnel, per instruction. Firefighters discovered an alarm sounding, with the panel referring to a specific room. A check of the room showed no indication that something in the room set the alarm off. Hotel staff was advised to have a technician respond and check the system.

Carmel-by-the-Sea: Ambulance dispatched to Carmel Center Place for the victim of a fall. On arrival, a female in her 80s was found conscious, alert and oriented. Per Cal Fire on scene, a bystander stated the patient was initially unresponsive. Patient stated she never lost consciousness and her fall was purely mechanical. Patient denied any complaints other than pain to her nose and wrist where she had a small laceration and a small avulsion. Secondary exam revealed patient was hypotensive. Ambulance crew aggressively attempted to convince the patient to travel to the hospital due to concerns of underlying conditions that could lead to disability and/or death. Patient refused transport but consented to go to CHOMP by personal vehicle with a firefighter driving.

Carmel-by-the-Sea: Ambulance dispatched to Highway 1 and Ocean Avenue for an unknown medical. Cal Fire with patient refusing medical care. Ambulance canceled.

SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 23

Carmel-by-the-Sea: Victim reported the loss of a fabric camera bag with zipper and drawstring containing 23 memory cards for a digital camera. Reporting party had been walking along the beach-front area north of Fourth Avenue. If located, please notify RP.

Carmel-by-the-Sea: Citizen reported a possible drunk in public on Dolores Street. Contact was made with the subject who had been drinking but did not meet the criteria for arrest. He was interviewed and was clear of any wants or holds. He was provided a courtesy escort to his place of employment.

Carmel-by-the-Sea: Carmel P.D. responded to Palou and Fourth on a report of construction being conducted in violation of the CMC. Contact made with two laborers out of Redwood City. The subjects were conducting minor construction work inside the residence and were advised of the muni code violation. A records check showed neither party had ever been contacted for prior muni code violations. Identifying information was obtained with a report being forwarded to the Carmel building official for contact with the general contractor and/or the owner of the residence. Both subjects were cooperative and packed up their equipment and left upon request.

Carmel-by-the-Sea: Retail store on Mission Street reported the theft of two men's handbags sometime between 1400 and 1530 hours. No suspect information at this time.

Carmel-by-the-Sea: Reporting party called in regards to a minor traffic collision that occurred today on San Carlos Street north of Fifth Avenue.

Carmel-by-the-Sea: Suspicious circumstances on Third Avenue.

Carmel-by-the-Sea: A male called 911. The caller said he was having a "psychotic episode." Caller stated he may need to commit himself for 5150 evaluation. During the middle of the call, the line was disconnected. Units responded to the caller's residence. After arriving, the officer spoke with the male caller. He said he was on the phone with the crisis center when the officer arrived. He told the officer he did not want to hurt himself or anyone else. He told the officer he would be calling the crisis center back. On Sept. 24 at approximately 0225 hours, the same male called Carmel P.D. and informed dispatch he was feeling fine and thanked everyone for assisting him.

Carmel-by-the-Sea: Fire engine responded to a smoke investigation in the area of Rio Road and Lasuen behind Carmel Mission. Prior to arrival, firefighters were advised by Cal Fire of a barbecue taking place at the Mission, which was confirmed.

Too many Mission Ranch cocktails land man in jail for allegedly kicking cop

PINE CONE STAFF REPORT

A 29-YEAR-OLD Carmel resident who was falling-down drunk lost his cool and assaulted a Mission Ranch employee and two sheriff's deputies after being told to get a ride home, according to Monterey County Sheriff's Sgt. Scott Ragan. Nicholas Vorobiov was arrested Sept. 26 and taken to Monterey County Jail on charges of public intoxication and battery on a peace officer.

In the bar, Vorobiov was reportedly no trouble when someone suggested he had had enough. Shortly after 8 p.m., an employee called a cab, and the man walked outside and collapsed in some bushes, according to Ragan. But after regaining his feet and waiting a little while for the taxi, Vorobiov decided he would drive himself home.

"The employee tried to stop him," Ragan said, and the suspect "punched him in the face." When the worker shoved back, Vorobiov rolled off the hood of his car and fell to the ground, where arriving deputy Kathy Palazzolo found him prone.

She arrested Vorobiov and arranged to rendezvous with another deputy, Fernando White, who was transporting a suspect from Big Sur to Monterey County Jail in the department's Ford truck, so the two could be taken together.

They met at Carmel High School to put Vorobiov in White's vehicle, according to Ragan. During the transfer, he spat at Palazzolo, who decided to place a hood over his head to prevent his spitting on her again. As the two deputies attempted to further restrain him, Vorobiov allegedly kicked the other deputy in the groin.

He is facing a charge of public intoxication and two counts of battery on a peace officer.

Six-foot, 650-pound ‘Trumpeter’ to greet Carmel Plaza visitors

By MARY BROWNFIELD

AFTER DESCRIBING themselves as ill-equipped to define “art” and decide what can be displayed in public view on private property, planning commissioners nonetheless unanimously voted last month to allow Richard MacDonald’s “Trumpeter” to be installed in a planter near the entrance to Carmel Plaza.

The commission had earlier approved the same bronze piece for installation outside the Dawson Cole Fine Art Gallery on San Carlos Street, but assistant planner Nathan Schmidt recommended granting the Plaza’s request to have the 6-foot-tall, 250-pound sculpture moved to a planter outside Louis Vuitton. With the dissolution of the Carmel Art Board last year, Schmidt said the planning commission is henceforth responsible for deciding “the quality and placement of all outdoor art visible from the public right of way.”

CarrieAnn of Dawson Cole said the Plaza approached her gallery with the idea of placing the “Trumpeter” near its Ocean Avenue gate. MacDonald is a widely collected sculptor who uses traditional methods for working in bronze. (He also designed the golfer sculpture erected at Peter Hay golf course for the 2000 U.S. Open and did the bust of Del Monte Forest founder S.F.B Morse installed near the 1st Tee of the Pebble Beach Golf Links.) CarrieAnn said the “Trumpeter” would remain for sale at $188,000, and the gallery would pay rent for the planter spot.

Though he could not attend the Sept. 12 hearing, marketing manager Ryan Williams wrote in a letter to the commission, “Carmel Plaza feels that adding this feature to its common area will enhance not only the customer’s experience, but also add to the City of Carmel’s flavor of a true art colony and represent a local artist and all of his creativity.”

Carmel Art Association sculptor and former CAB member Eleen Auvil objected to the commercialism, and resident Monte Miller suggested the planning commission defer from making decisions regarding matters of art.

The enrichment question

According to city policy, the planning commission should base art-related decisions on whether the request would meet several goals, including:

- “to enrich the public environment” for residents and visitors through incorporation of the visual arts;
- “to nurture, enhance and encourage” the artistic community;
- to enable the city to “sustain and

Successful inaugural festival exercises brains overtime

By MARY BROWNFIELD

HAILED BY Carmel Authors and Ideas Festival organizers as “the greatest storyteller of our time,” Frank McCourt, whose three autobiographies chronicle an impoverished upbringing in Ireland, his trek to the United States and a 30-year teaching career, opened the inaugural festival at Sunset Center Friday night.

The three-day gathering, which featured the opening-night reception Sept. 28, followed by talks, autograph sessions and small group meetings with more than two dozen authors Sept. 29-30, was organized by Carmel residents Jim and Cindy McGillen. They modeled it after the celebrated Sun Valley book festival, which they have attended for years.

Following welcome comments by Carmel Mayor Sue McCloud and an appearance by a convincing John Steinbeck, Shannon Miller sang “Danny Boy” — reportedly McCourt’s favorite song. A Santa Catalina School seventh grader introduced the celebrated speaker.

“Don’t you have anything better to do tonight?” McCourt asked the audience — his dourness offset by a wry sense of humor, the whole package tempered by his clear Irish brogue and small stature. “Does anybody work in Carmel?”

He told the audience of several hundred people he met Jim McGillen in Sun Valley and agreed to come speak in the city he described as “one of the prettiest places on the face of the earth.”

The only thing missing in Carmel, he pointed out later, is a bookstore. “Maybe I should come back and open one myself,” he said, adding that he has the money to lose.

McCourt spent most of his roughly 45 minutes on the Sunset Center stage talking about teaching, the vocation he stumbled into after leaving Ireland for New York at 19. Newly arrived, he worked odd jobs, was drafted during the Korean War and spent two years stationed in Bavaria, “drinking beer and chasing frauleins at taxpayers’ expense,” read voraciously and talked his way into New York University — despite having never graduated from high school — by telling the admissions department he’d read Dostoevsky and Joyce.

“Nobody reads Joyce,” he confided to the audience.

In search of a career, he considered journalism but decided he lacked the proper personality, and given his love of books and enjoyment of kids, he settled on teaching.

“I didn’t realize what I was getting myself into,” he said. “It’s the hardest job in the world” — especially at a vocational high school in New York, an experience McCourt chronicles in his third autobiography, “Teacher Man.” (First was the Pulitzer-winning “Angela’s Ashes,” about his “miserable childhood,” followed by “Tis.”)

He read an excerpt about his first day at a school where the teenagers managed to detect his weaknesses “like heat-seeking missiles.”

Within hours, he found himself in the principal’s office trying to explain why he ate a balogna sandwich thrown by one of his students, and the following day he was back to talk his way out of an inappropriate remark: One of the boys asked if he went out with girls in Ireland, and in exasperation, he had replied, “No, we went out with sheep!”

But he got them to work. As a writing exercise, he had them practice a skill many had tried already: the excuse note. Write an excuse note from Adam or Eve to God, he told them. He also asked them to write obituaries of teachers.

Tattoos, piercings on display at Monterey Museum of Art

By MARY BROWNFIELD

‘SO MANY times, people see somebody with a tattoo and are afraid to look at them, but now they can.”

That’s one of the reasons Margi Perotti, an administrative coordinator for the City of Carmel and the owner of Monterey tattoo and piercing shop Creative Visions, happily obliged when the Monterey Museum of Art asked her to organize an exhibit for its Arts Lounge@La Mirada quarterly series. “Monterey Ink: A Night of Living Art,” will run from 7 to 9 p.m. Friday, Oct. 5, and feature two dozen live models showing off tattoos and piercings by Perotti, who started tattooing 18 years ago, and the other artists in her shop.

“They’ll be set up like paintings and statues on little pedestals,” she said of the men and women who agreed to be part of the art for the evening. They will be spread throughout La Mirada, the Monterey Museum of Art’s historic property off Fremont Street near Monterey Peninsula College.

“We chose a wide variety of people who have large enough work to be able to be seen from a couple of feet away, with details,” she said, “and who would make a good impression and be able to sit there and answer questions.”

All are clients of her shop, and almost everyone was game, though Perotti said one person backed out because he felt uncomfortable with the idea of people scrutinizing his half-naked body for two hours.

Attendees — who are encouraged to sport their own tattoos during the event if they have any — will see a wide variety of work, including traditional biker tattoos, Asian fusion art, intricate flowers and dragons. They will also have the opportunity to examine tattoos in various stages of completion.

Several will exhibit body piercings, including “corsetry,” which involves patterns of rings down the back with ribbon laced through.

“The body piercings will be a little bit shocking for a lot of people,” Perotti said.

And how did such an exhibit end up within the halls of the MMA, which has a permanent collection of 15,000 paintings, photographs, works on paper, and Asian ceramics, including many pieces by notable and collected California artists from the last century?

“They approached me and asked if I would be willing to do something like this,” Perotti said. Of course, she enthusiastically answered in the affirmative, having already contemplated a similar show and pitched it to Sunset Center several years back but was told Carmel probably “wasn’t ready for that.”

“So when they approached me, I knew exactly what I wanted to do,” she said. “It will be a time for people to be able to come and expand their minds toward tattooing and the art of it. They can stare and look and not feel bad about it.”

Arts Lounge@La Mirada is a quarterly evening gathering for Monterey Contemporaries, a group of MMA members between the ages of 21 and 45, “who appreciate art and music, good food and beverage, culture and conversation, and enjoy meeting others who share similar interests,” according to the museum.

The Oct. 5 Arts Lounge is sponsored by Creative Visions Tattoo and Body Piercing on Lighthouse Avenue, and by The Ol’ Factory Café in Sand City, which will host an after-party. Music and “lounge concepts” will be provided DJ Todd Prophet and Brian Bode. Mendocino Brewing Company will pour the suds, and Ventana

Vineyards will offer the fruit of the vine.

La Mirada is located at 720 Via Mirada next to Monterey Peninsula College. Admission to the Arts Lounge is $5, and no one under 21 will be admitted. For more information, visit www.montereyart.org or call (831) 372-5477.

P.G. COUNCIL, FACING $2M SHORTFALL, APPROVES 16 LAYOFFS

By KELLY NIX

THE PACIFIC Grove City Council Wednesday unanimously approved a reorganization of the city government that would eliminate 24 city employee job positions and save the city about $570,000 a year.

The council made its decision after a packed, three-hour discussion at city hall, which drew passionate public comment from those critical of the reorganization.

"There is a whole gamut of things that are revenue producing that I don't think have been looked at," said former P.G. mayor Jeanne Byrne.

But council members said they didn't think there was any other option but to approve the plan.

"I know the impact this kind of move has on people," said councilman Dan Davis. "Unfortunately, my responsibility is to ensure the financial well-being of the city. I just don't see any choice."

The reorganization, which means 16 employees will be laid off in January, was recommended by city manager Jim Colangelo, who contends the cuts would not mean a reduction of services and would make the city run more efficiently.

"The status quo is not an option," Colangelo told the council. "On the current path, we run out of money about this time next year. Eighty percent of our costs are salary. We aren't going to make a big dent in reducing costs unless we reduce salaries."

City budget director Jim Becklenberg outlined the P.G.'s financial straits in a detailed report to council, which outlined a potential $2 million shortfall next year.

"We have a $2 million problem to solve in order to have a sustainable community and have the services we think the community expects," Becklenberg said.

Despite the figures presented by Becklenberg and Colangelo, many members of the public asked the council to postpone its decision until there is more public review of the reorganization. One citizen, Richard Ahart, suggested the council scrutinize Colangelo.

"I don't see him coming to the table and offering his salary up," Ahart said of the city manager, who makes about $158,000 per year. "I strongly suggest they look at his performance ... and ask for a resignation."

Tim McCormick, representative for Laborers Union of North America, Local 270, which represents city workers, threatened a lawsuit.

"The city manager has not gone through the process under our constitution," McCormick said. "These jobs are a property right and require due process. You cannot replace jobs for jobs at a lower wage."

The layoffs affect nearly every city department, and include positions from secretaries to directors. Jon Biggs, the city's community development director, recreation director John Miller and golf director Mike Leach are among the highest paid employees to be laid off. Factoring in employee benefits, each position costs the city more than $160,000

Sandy Claws

By Margot Petit Nichols

GUS AND Frank Werbe, both 2, have no common blood but are the best of friends and brothers. They are bearded collie dogs who bear little resemblance to their cleaner cut relatives. Most people take them for Old English sheep dogs.

They're generally very quiet, except for the "crazies" that afflict them during the first five minutes out the door, at which time they cavort and spin in circles to show their elation at being free of walls.

Their sister, a 12-year-old German shepherd named Princess Katherine of Carmel, goes to the beach daily with Mom and Gus, while Frank, being the more boisterous of the group, comes along later with either Mom or Dad Tom.

The Werbe clan has two domiciles: One in San Mateo and one in Carmel-by-the-Sea. Gus and Frank's feline siblings never come to Carmel, but stay home guarding the fort in San Mateo. Spike, Smudge and Jessie prefer not to ride in strange conveyances with four wheels and a motor, and they loathe the beach. So much for Carmel.

Gus, who was fairly small at 4 months when he became a Werbe, hasn't yet grasped the idea that he's a little big now to sit in Dad's lap. He loves to be as close as possible to his folks, and for this reason has gained the soubriquet, Snuggle Pants. Since a lap is out of the question, he is content to lie along the back of the couch and drape himself around Dad's shoulders like a stole.

The boys and Katherine enjoy snuggling with Dad and Mom at bedtime, Gus on his back with his four feet in the air, Frank and Katherine in more prosaic postures at the foot of the bed.

The three enjoy visits from their brothers Tommy, 24, and Robert, 22. They also enjoy eating: Gus once wolfed down three freshly barbecued filet mignon steaks from the table, and Frank once ate the bottom half of a bedspread.

Forty years ago, these pristine coastal highlands captivated Clint Eastwood.

Today, his vision has inspired a community that only a few kindred spirits will share. It took years of thoughtful planning to ensure that 85 percent of Tehama would remain untouched – wildlife corridors preserved, the natural beauty unblemished, your privacy ensured. While just 90 secluded homesites will grace these 2,000 acres, fewer than half remain available. For those in search of privacy amid natural splendor, a treasured legacy awaits.

“Taking an interest in the land was the only way to protect it.”

The new design "substantially limited the mass and scale," senior planner Sean Conroy told the DRB Sept. 26. He commended Davis for respecting the neighbors' privacy and recommended approval of the proposed demolition and new construction.

The new plans were included on the board's consent agenda for approval without discussion, but member Mary Bell wanted to talk about the proposal. She wondered if a skylight at the rear of the house would bother the neighbors.

Davis argued it was crucial in a room that would otherwise be quite dark due to surrounding homes and trees.

"Mr. Kashfi has really gone the extra mile on this house to reach a compromise," he said.

When it was his turn to speak, Kashfi asked the board to approve his scaled-down design.

Resident Robert Cook, who owns property to the east, asked the board to prevent Kashfi from planting trees that could grow as tall as 20 feet and interfere with his view. The board decided to grant the request by limiting the plants to varieties that will max out at 10 feet.

appealed the originally approved design to the council, did not state any objections to the new plans.

But co-appellant Paul McKnight, who lives east of Kashfi's property and requested the council demand a one-story design, wrote a letter objecting to the revised proposal. He said the new home would "substantially block" the only ocean view available from the deck of his house. "We request that Mr. Kashfi consider lowering the elevation of this southern roof line," he wrote. "We hope that he will be open to this suggestion in the spirit of being a good neighbor."

Board members decided Kashfi had already been a good enough neighbor after removing the second floor from his plans even though the city council had only asked for a redesign. "Considering where they would have been had the first concept been built, although I can see there is going to be some loss of view, under the circumstances, it's really kind of minimal," board member Michael Lynch said.

Bell complimented Davis on his revised design. "You have a big lot and used it effectively," she said. "I am concerned and feel badly the McKnights next door are going to lose a little bit of their view, but considering Mr. Kashfi has completely taken off his second story, I don't have any objections to the project."

"Mr. Kashfi has gone to great lengths to make this acceptable to the board," commented DRB member Janet Reimers, who was the lone dissenter on the original design when the board approved it in June. "He's gone through the full process and is certainly more educated than when he started."

The board unanimously approved Kashfi's revised application.

AFRICAN SAFARI, CONCERT TO BENEFIT LOCAL ELEPHANTS

By KELLY NIX

EVERY YEAR it costs more than $100,000 to take care of Buffy, Butch, Kristi and Paula — four “retired” African elephants who call a portion of the 51-acre Vision Quest Ranch in Salinas their home.

Facing rising costs to take care of the animals, a safari in South Africa and a concert at the ranch are being offered to help pay for the extensive care they require.

“Our lives revolve around the elephants,” said Charlie Sammut, director of Elephants of Africa Rescue Society, the nonprofit dedicated to providing a habitat for wild African animals with a focus on elephants. “It costs about $85 a day per elephant just for food and vet care. Factoring in staffing and everything, it’s not cheap.”

Sammut is also founder of Wild Things A.R. Inc., a company that provides trained wild exotic and domestic birds and animals for film, TV, live productions and educational purposes.

“We are constantly working with the elephants” — which range in age from 26 to 40 and were circus performers — “bathing them, trimming feet, removing dead skin, whatever they need.”

To help out EARS, Dan Presser, owner of Four Winds Travel in Carmel, is donating some of the profits from a $8,449 trip to South Africa he’s offering from Jan. 15 to Jan. 27.

“I’m giving 50 percent of the proceeds of the trip to EARS,” Presser said.

There’s only space for 10 couples and it’s filling up quickly, Presser said.

The trip’s itinerary includes a visit to Robben Island, where former South African president and anti-Apartheid activist Nelson Mandela was imprisoned for more than two

Chamber makes finding wine easy

By MARY BROWNFIELD

MANY PEOPLE don't realize eight venues within Carmel-by-the-Sea's one square mile offer wine for tasting — so the chamber of commerce published a brochure to spread the word.

"People are really excited about it," because it informs visitors they don't have to leave town, or get in a car, to taste wine, according to chamber CEO Monta Potter. She has long wanted to produce themed brochures and plans to publish more on topics such as wedding planning (soon to be released), relocation (being drafted), ecotourism, architecture, history and others. Chamber member Paige Johnson Designs is doing the graphics.

Potter said she first saw themed brochures in San Francisco and wanted similar pieces to promote Carmel.

"It's a trend that we're definitely following," she said.

Available at tasting rooms, some hotels, the visitor center on San Carlos Street — and anywhere else that wants to carry it — the tri-fold, full-color "Wine Tasting in Carmel" piece describes a walking route to downtown establishments, as well as a driving or bus tour of stops in Carmel Valley, the mouth of the valley and Monterey. All featured businesses are chamber members who contributed to the cost of printing. Monterey-Salinas Transit, which provides the Grapevine

FREE-WHEELING

Wheels have become an integral part of a vehicle's style and design, as manufacturers and owners alike lavish attention on beautiful alloy wheels. These light and attractive components require some maintenance. Otherwise, if road grime and brake dust are allowed to accumulate, alloy wheels may become stained and discolored. On anodized wheels, which exhibit a form of metal plating that leaves a colorized patina on exterior surfaces, the damage caused by lack of maintenance can be permanent. Vehicle owners are advised to hose down their alloy wheels with cold water on a weekly basis, using a spray-on wheel cleaner specifically formulated for the type of wheels they have. Scrub with a soft cloth or brush where necessary.

The wheels on a car, truck, or SUV are the only part of your vehicle that makes contact with the road. With this being so, our concerned professionals always recommend proper wheel maintenance. Proper care for your wheels leads to safety and proper performance from your vehicle. All of our work is done by ASE Certified technicians, and we are also AAA Approved. We are the oldest independent repair facility in Monterey going... and growing!

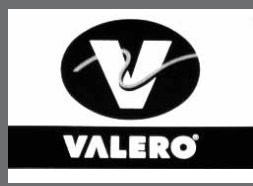

P.S. Brake dust buildup on alloy wheels may be prevented by using brake pad dust shields; however, this may also cause the brakes to overheat, leading to warped rotors.

REMODEL OR MOVE?

This is a very involved question. Is it better to remodel your existing home or to find the home that answers your needs and move into it?

Truly, you will benefit by discussing the matter at some length with your real estate advisor, but let's look at a few of the more obvious considerations.

The reality is that you are usually better off finding another home that truly meets your needs and wishes. You can do the necessary research and wind up very confident that your next home's value hasn't been distorted by additions to or subtractions from its original design, and isn't out of line with the value of other homes in the same neighborhood. Further, you don't have the problem of trying to fit square pegs into existing round holes, or newborn children into former closets.

By far the most important issue is to know exactly what you need your new (or remodeled) home to provide you. The second issue is sheer economics. Not only do you need to see whether you can get the money back out of your house that you put into it in a remodel, but you also need to look at market conditions. Is it reasonably easy to sell this home today? How easy or difficult is it to buy another? What would the differences be between financing your remodel and financing the purchase of another home? Again, be sure to talk with your real estate advisor about these questions. Just call Maureen at 622-2565 and visit her website at www.mauureenmason.com.

Point Lobos Community Day

By CHRIS COUNTS

WITH JUST 1,200 acres — and only 550 above water — Point Lobos State Reserve is not a particularly large park. It features no dramatic mountain peak or jaw-dropping waterfall. Yet the park, with its windswept cypress trees, dramatic rock formations and pristine coves, is perhaps the popular natural scenic wonder on the California Coast.

In recognition of its status, the park will host its first Community Day Saturday, Oct. 6.

The event, which pays tribute to Point Lobos' remarkable natural and cultural history, offers locals an opportunity to enjoy one of the Monterey Peninsula's greatest treasures.

"For such a small piece of property, Point Lobos has such incredible diversity," said Chuck Bancroft, a California Department of Parks and Recreation ranger who has worked at Point Lobos for nearly 27 years. "Ansel Adams once said, 'You can point your camera in any direction and get a great photo.'"

Located just three miles south of Carmel, the park was founded in 1933. Its first residents — indigenous people now known collectively as the Ohlone — first occupied Point Lobos between 2,500 and 3,000 years ago. After the Carmel Mission was established in 1771, Spanish vaqueros grazed cattle there. By the middle of the 19th century, Chinese fishermen were commercially harvesting abalone at Point Lobos. In 1862, Portuguese fishermen set up an extensive whaling operation that thrived for more than two decades. Just before the turn of the 20th century, Japanese divers began harvesting abalone, a venture that was so successful it once accounted for 75 percent of the abalone sold in California. Later, a town was planned for the north shore.

Today, Point Lobos is wholly owned by the State of California, and few remnants of the fishing industries remain. Though it is heavily used by tourists and has been the setting for several Hollywood film (including Alfred Hitchcock's 1939 Oscar-winning Best film, "Rebecca"), the land has reverted back to a somewhat natural state. And with a network of trails traversing its pine forests, it has emerged as a hikers' paradise. Its trails are relatively short (the longest is 1.4 miles) and the topography isn't too dramatic so, it provides easy accessibility for even the mobility-challenged. A wheelchair-accessible loop trail leads from the park's main parking lot to dramatic Sea Lion Point.

While Point Lobos is a user-friendly place, Saturday's event makes it particularly easy to learn about the park's history and natural resources.

"The event is a nice way of saying, 'Thank you, to the community,'" Bancroft said. "On a typical day, we offer one or two guided nature walks. On Saturday we'll offer 16. We're also going to have three volunteers with spotting scopes posted at different locations."

Bancroft will serve as one of two wandering "poets" as he recites the work of Robinson Jeffers, Jeanne D'Orge, Elliot Ruchowitz-Roberts and others.

Parking at the reserve is very limited, but free parking will be available at the Crossroads shopping center, and buses will shuttle guests to and from the park all day. The first shuttle will leave the Crossroads at 9 a.m. Food will not be available at the park, so pack a picnic lunch, wear sturdy walking shoes and don't forget your camera or binoculars.

For more information, call (831) 624-4909 or visit www.pointlobos.org.

C.V. road work postponed until January

By KELLY NIX

CALIFORNIA AMERICAN Water Co. has agreed to postpone its water main work in Carmel Valley Village until January but will continue road work east of the Village later this month.

For four years, Cal Am has been in the process of upgrading the valley's water pipes, which serve as the Monterey Peninsula's principal water artery. But residents have complained about traffic tie-ups on Carmel Valley Road, while business owners said traffic delays are detrimental to sales.

"October is still one of the most popular months for visitors," said Cal Am community relations manager Catherine Bowie. "So the businesses asked us to delay the work until January, which is a slower time for them."

This month, Cal Am will resume night work on Carmel Valley Road past the village in the one-lane area known as "the bucket."

Jeffrey Andrews, owner of Avant Garden and Home in Carmel Valley

Village, collected hundreds of signatures and met with Cal Am seeking to have the work done at night and postponed until January, when business is slower for shops and restaurants.

"Everybody is pretty happy about it," said Andrews, who also met with Cal Am and Monterey Peninsula Engineering, the construction company performing the work, in hopes of modifying the schedule.

The January construction will be from Village Drive to Holman Road, and east of the Village on the one-lane section of Carmel Valley Road past Klondike Canyon Road. All the work beginning in January will be done during the day.

Although Andrews sought to have the work performed at night, he said the he's generally satisfied with the agreement. "Hats off to Cal Am and Monterey Peninsula Engineering for listening and working with us," he said.

Cal Am said night work in the Village would be more disruptive to residents than day work because of the bright lights and noise from trucks' back-up alarms.

From Mexico to Monterey — the final leg of a long, tragic voyage

By PAUL BROCCCHINI

WE HAD made our way from Cabo to Ensenada in six days. I did not expect such a quick and easy passage but was grateful for it. We had to bid adieu to Jose, because he does not have an American visa. He flew back to La Paz, while Juergen and I prepared for the 85-mile run to San Diego.

I have not mentioned how well we ate during this trip. It almost became a competition. Juergen was professionally trained as a chef in his 20s and at the apex of his career headed the food services division of American Airlines. Jose is a terrific Mexican chef. I was the weak link in this triad, but I had a few tricks up my sleeve and was able, if not to keep up, at least to achieve an acceptable level of cuisine.

The trip to San Diego was uneventful, and I stayed for a week at the Southwestern Yacht Club on Shelter Island. They have an excellent facility with several hundred slips, a fine clubhouse with a restaurant and bar, friendly help, and welcoming and cordial members. Juergen is a member and facilitated my stay. The week was spent in getting the engine serviced, doing boat jobs and riding Nellie’s fold-up bicycle around Shelter Island.

The weather was foggy and gloomy all week, the famous June Gloom — only it was May. I was hoping for a sunny, warm stay in San Diego, but, alas, it was not to be.

At the end of the week my friend, Chris Laing, another sailing buddy from Monterey, joined me for the trip to Ventura, which I planned as a leisurely voyage up the Southern California coast. This is also an uphill sail, but the conditions are normally mild and pleasant. The “Alta California Bash” begins when you round Point Conception.

Visiting Southern California by boat is a dream. The coast is beautiful, the weather mild, and the towns are pretty and fun with terrific marinas and restaurants. This is Southern California without ever getting into a car or near a freeway. I love it!

I did not know that Chris had been raised mostly in Monaco, and he is full of entertaining Monaco tales. One of the fun things on boats is getting to know your mates. Chris was not only a good sailor but great company.

Mild weather,
pretty towns,
terrific marinas
and restaurants
— and no cars

We mostly motored, but had one full day of sailing across Santa Monica Bay from Marina del Rey to Malibu. We took short hops up the coast, including overnight stops in Oceanside, Dana Point, Newport Beach, Marina del Rey and Malibu. We were able to get guest slips at yacht clubs all the way to Marina del Rey. In Malibu we anchored in Paradise Cove in front of the mansions of the stars, including Barbra Streisands’ place that apparently hit the news while I was away. We were the only boat anchored in that delightful cove.

We wrapped up our six-day trip in Ventura on a Saturday morning, rented a car and drove back to Carmel the next day.

Hardly any people

Later, I returned to Ventura for a weekend trip to Santa Cruz Island. My son, Matt, joined me for the Father’s Day weekend. We sailed to Smuggler’s Cove on the east end of the island and then on to Prisoner’s Harbor the next day, a pretty anchorage on the north coast. There is a pier at Prisoner’s to enhance” its recognition as an artistic center;

■ to increase public access to artwork, and to promote understanding and awareness of art in public; and

■ to promote diversity in medium, style and design.

Schmidt said the sculpture would meet those criteria, but planning commissioner Steven Hillyard was uncertain of his ability to agree or disagree.

“I have no expertise to say whether this would enrich us or not,” he said.

When they approved the same sculpture for placement outside Dawson Cole a few months ago, commissioners expressed similar discomfort, and Strid said nothing much has changed.

“I personally don’t feel qualified to make that decision, either,” he said.

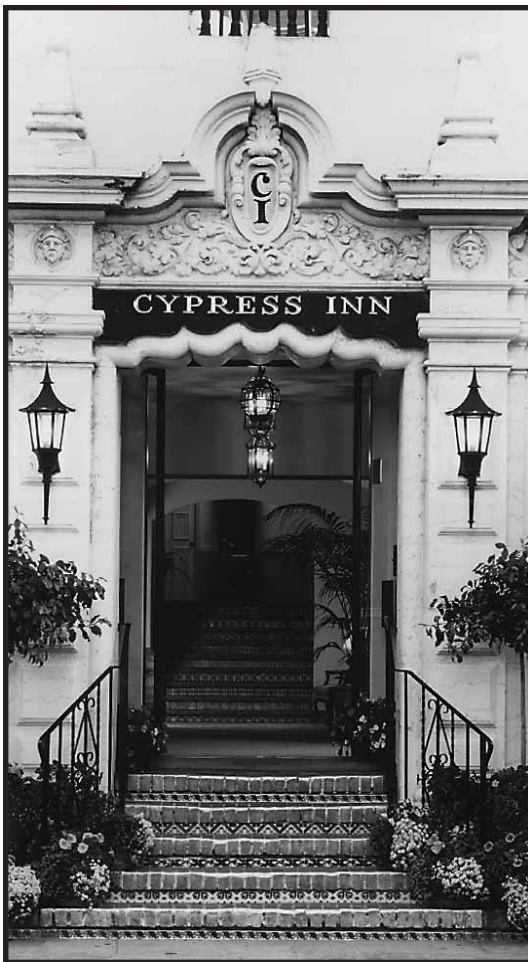

Commissioner Robin Wilson said organizations and artists should decide what to display, not just the Plaza or a single gallery, but commissioner Alan Hower disagreed.

“That location belongs to the Plaza — they should be allowed to select what they put on their property,” he said, adding that the commission’s previous yes-vote on Dawson Cole’s application indicated they should vote similarly on the Plaza’s request.

“Last time, we went through the same exact discussion and ended up accepting it,” he said. “This is still private property.”

Wilson suggested the Plaza hold contests regularly to rotate local artwork through the highly visible spot.

“I would find that a whole lot more palatable than getting one of seven copies at $250,000 and sticking it out there,” he said.

Without taking a vote, the council — minus councilman Gerard Rose, who was absent — directed Rawson to extend the parking limits. City administrator Rich Guillen said a resolution formalizing the change will be submitted for adoption at a future meeting.

SHAKESPEARE

Anti-Stratfordians believe Shakespeare was simply a front for an aristocrat — or a group of aristocrats. By creating a fictitious author of the plays, the real writer could anonymously comment on — with impunity and often great satire — the contemporary politics, affairs and gossip of Elizabethan England.

“If it was known that the plays were written by a circle of nobility, the queen would have known that they were writing about her,” Moorer suggested.

A student’s insight

The Golden Bough Playhouse will present a series of lectures Friday, Saturday and Sunday featuring some of the leading voices in anti-Stratfordian research. Perhaps most interesting about the lineup of speakers is the inclusion of Allegra Krasznegewicz, a junior at Santa Catalina School in Monterey. Krasznegewicz recently took home top honors in countywide and statewide History Day competitions for her paper, “William Shakespeare and the Authorship Controversy: A Study in Literary Triumph and Historical Tragedy.” Despite her youth, Krasznegewicz offers impressive credentials as a Shakespeare scholar. She started reading and performing Shakespeare in junior high school, and after spending a month in London and Oxford during her freshman year, she began researching the Shakespeare authorship controversy. In addition to the honors she received for her Shakespeare paper, Krasznegewicz has also been awarded top prizes in poetry and French competitions.

Allegra Krasznegewicz

“After Allegra won the History Day competitions, she started getting some press,” Moorer said. “She’s a great example of a young scholar in training. That’s what it’s going to take to solve this 300-year-old mystery. Eventually, someone is going to solve it.”

Teachers and students will be admitted free to the lectures. For more information about the conference, call (831) 622-0100 or visit www.shakespeare-oxford.com and click on “2007 Conference.”

■ ‘Midsummer,’ ‘Macbeth’

With so many Shakespeare scholars in town, it seems only natural that PacRep Theatre would pay tribute to arguably the greatest writer in literature, whoever he might be. PacRep presents performances of Shakespeare’s Midsummer Night’s Dream at the Outdoor Forest Theater, Friday and Saturday, Oct. 5-6, at 7:30 p.m. They’ll also offer matinee performances of Macbeth at the Circle Theatre Saturday and Sunday, Oct. 6-7, at 2 p.m. For tickets, call (831) 622-0100 or visit www.pacrep.org.

Exhibit pays homage to an American myth

By CHRIS COUNTS

MYTHOLOGY provides inspiration for many artists — and not just the mythology of the ancients, with its winged beasts, fire-breathing dragons and multitude of gods. One local artist draws his inspiration from the modern legend of the hardy, free-spirited and rebellious motorcycle rider.

“There exists in America this image of the biker as an outsider,” explained sculptor Doug Downs, whose work will be featured in a new group exhibit, “On [and Off] the Road,” which opens Saturday, Oct. 6, at the Carmel Art Association. “It’s an important image in Americana. Motorcycle riders kind of see themselves in heroic terms.”

In “On [and Off] the Road,” Downs is joined by painters Alicia Meheen and Wilda Northrop, who provide the backdrop for the Pacific Grove sculptor’s study of motorcycles and the heroes — or anti-heroes — who ride them. Meheen’s oil and watercolor landscapes are particularly relevant. They chronicle Meheen’s personal travels along the back roads of America in an RV.

“When my husband and I travel, the images build up in my camera and in my head,” she said.

Back in her studio, Meheen recreates photographs from her road trips on canvas — no small challenge for an artist accustomed to painting in the plein-aire style.

Northrop, meanwhile, takes a different approach. The Pacific Grove watercolor painter trains her brush on still lifes and close-ups, providing a nice contrast to Meheen’s work and helping to create a diverse and dynamic scenic background for Downs’ mythic motorcycles.

The somewhat challenging theme of the exhibit suits Northrop just fine. The painter is taking more chances than ever. “My work is getting louder and brighter as I get older,” Northrop offered. “I’m going all out.”

Seascapes and golden rolling hills

The art association is also hosting new exhibits by Cyndra Bradford and Jeff Daniel Smith of Pacific Grove. Bradford’s show presents a collection of new oil paintings that celebrate one of the Monterey Peninsula’s greatest natural treasures.

“I’ve been working on a series of large paintings of sunsets at Point Lobos,” Bradford explained.

“I’m painting with a thick palette knife,” he said. “It’s almost like I’m sculpting — it’s a wonderful medium for seascapes.”

Smith, who is married to Bradford, is a plein-aire painter with a particular affection for the golden, rolling hills of Steinbeck country. Favoring the late afternoon light, Smith photographs scenes in Carmel Valley and along the Highway 68 corridor, then creates larger paintings in his studio.

“The paintings focus on the land, the light and shadows,” Smith said. “The look of the land is the one aspect that defines the California landscape.”

The art association will host a reception from 6 to 8 p.m. The exhibit will continue through Nov. 6. The venue is located on Dolores Street between Fifth and Sixth. For more information, call (831) 624-6176 or visit www.carmelart.org.

In “Valley Noir,” a exhibit of paintings by San Fernando Valley artist Randy Sandel, opening Friday, Oct. 5, at the Carl Cherry Center, parts of Southern California are portrayed as truly foreboding places.

“Her work is devoted to the dark side of Los Angeles,” said Robert Reese, executive director of the Cherry Center. “Some of the locations are the landmarks of old Hollywood. It’s very dramatic.”

The Cherry Center is also presenting a show of paintings by Jeanne D’Orge. Also known as Mrs. Carl Cherry, D’Orge was a gifted writer, poet and painter who founded the center in 1948.

“She did a whole series of portraits and landscapes that are dark in nature, composition, color and theme,” Reese offered. “They’re really a nice complement to Randy’s work.”

A new piece by Kathleen Crocetti, “Infestation,” will be unveiled in the center’s sculpture garden. Reese describes the work as “very creepy.”

The three exhibits transform the Cherry Center into a somewhat spooky place, which seems appropriate considering Halloween is approaching.

The Cherry Center will host a reception from 5 to 7 p.m. The shows will continue through Nov. 23.

For more information, call (831) 624-7491 or visit www.carlcherrycenter.org.

Bigger can be better

While the growing popularity of miniature paintings is proof that bigger isn’t always better, Gallery North pays homage to bigger with a new show, “Big Art, Small Art,” which opens Saturday, Oct. 6.

“We decided to do a show with one large, smashing piece from each of us,” explained artist Barbara Kreitman.

Also featured in the show are Gallery North artists Maria Aliotti-Ford, Dr. Bayesteh “B.G.” Ghaffary, Sarah Healey, Cornelia Emery, Sarah Long, Rick Carpenter, Matthew Klein, Tom Davies, Sheila Delimont, Mary-Liz Houseman, Patty Biederman and Holli Moon.

The exhibit will also feature a small (10-by-10-inches) painting or sculpture from each of the member artists.

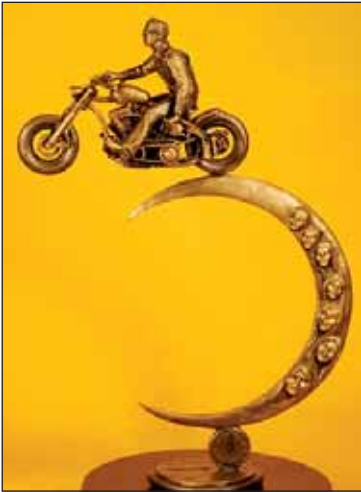

The gallery, which will host a reception from 5 to 7 p.m., is located on Dolores between Fifth and Sixth. The show will continue through Nov. 30. For more information, call (831) 620-1987 or visit www.gallerynorthcarmel.org.

In memoriam: Mezzotint master

G.H. Roth, a gifted artist and onetime Carmel resident who was acclaimed for her work engraving mezzotints, died recently in Geneva, Switzerland. She was 72.

Born in Poland in 1935, Roth was forbidden to become an artist, so she trained as a goldsmith instead, the family said. Her talent for crafting precious metals complemented her engraving work. She produced more than 380 copper plates, many as large as 24 inches by 36 inches. Each plate required at least 500 hours of labor to complete. Ultimately, she produced about 70,000 mezzotints, which are considered one of the most difficult art forms to create.

In 1968, Roth was awarded the Villa Romana Fellowship, the oldest art prize in Germany. She owned a house in Carmel from 1978 to 1999 and operated the G.H. Roth Gallery.

Doug Downs of Pacific Grove has created a series of sculptures that celebrate motorcycles and the heroes — or anti-heroes — who ride them.

They cook with amore and want you to linger at Nico Ristorante

By MARGOT PETIT NICHOLS

HE PRACTICED law on the Monterey Peninsula for a year before an irresistible opportunity presented itself: In 1994, Nico Mavris bought La Dolce Vita restaurant in Carmel-by-the-Sea from Domenico Vastarella and Alan Baylor and became a chef/restaurateur in the very dining establishment where he had waited tables while attending law school in Monterey.

Mavris met Enzo Pagano and Isiais Alonso at La Dolce Vita as colleagues and became fast friends there. Then, ten years ago, Mavris and Pagano became partners when they created Nico Ristorante Mediterraneo (in Le Bistro's old spot) just up San Carlos from La Dolce Vita — but much closer to Ocean Avenue. Alonso joined them as head chef. They ran the two restaurants simultaneously until selling La Dolce Vita in 1999.

"We don't really have titles for each other," Mavris said. "The three of us are always in the kitchen. We all cook.

"Enzo is from Calabria and I'm from Athens. We create the menu, which is Greek and Italian; together it becomes Mediterranean."

Isiais is from Oaxaca, Mexico, and is the "day-to-day chef de cuisine," Mavris said. "We're really like a family here; we've been together 15 years, counting the time at Dolce Vita."

What they have in common is a passion for food and what it represents. "Food is not just a substance," Mavris said, indicating it is the unifier that brings friends and family together — the sustenance that binds.

"We [at Nico] try to gently educate people about food — to take time over food. We have no idea how long we will be together in this life," he said, suggesting that moments around the table are precious.

The recent accidental death of Vastarella — who apparently drowned in a neighbor's Carmel Valley swimming pool — shocked the food community here. "He was my mentor, a soulful person, part of my family," Mavris said. "He use to come over and we'd talk about recipes together. We miss him."

Mavris said he met his wife, Lejla, at the restaurant when she was a student at the Monterey Institute of International Studies. They married during the millennial year of 2000. "We were the first of four couples to get married after meeting here at the restaurant," he said.

Mavris associates food with family and family gatherings because as a child he watched his mother making moussaka or spanikopita in their kitchen. It was his mother who taught him how to make galaktoboureko, a milk custard dessert baked in filo dough with warm honey spooned over it.

More recently, his mother sent a wheel of kefalograviera cheese to make an unusual dish called saganaki. Mavis interrupted this interview in the restaurant's back patio by leaping up for a trip to the kitchen. He returned with a sizzling hot pan in which he had browned a triangle of the cheese lightly coated in flour. He quickly poured in a small glass of Metaxa brandy, ignited it into a flaming spectacle, and by squeezing a lemon half over it, extinguished the flames.

Not only was it a dramatic show, but served with toasted pita points, the cheese proved to be delicious. Mavis said kasseri cheese can also be used for this dish.

While the Nico menu is composed primarily of Greek and Italian dishes, there are a number of Mediterranean specialties as well, such as a rosemary roasted Moroccan chicken in a tangerine reduction served with couscous.

Pagano's Italian heritage is seen in La Caprese salad of tomato, mozzarella and basil, spaghetti al carbonara, and crab ravioli in a Champagne cream sauce.

Mavis' Greek influence is evident in a moussaka with eggplant, potato, vegetables, goat cheese, Parmigiano and béchamel sauce, and also in Aegean grape leaves stuffed with herbed brown rice.

Alonso's heritage is brought out in a paela of seafood, chicken and seasonal vegetables in saffron.

Asked to suggest a complete meal for a patron dining at Nico for the first time to exemplify the style and breadth of their talents, he recommended these signature dishes:

To begin, a starter of grilled portobella mushrooms with rosemary and roasted pine nuts. An entrée of Monterey Bay herb-grilled salmon on a bed of saffron risotto, or a pasta of whole wheat linguine with fresh clams, sun-dried tomatoes and roasted garlic — or perhaps bistecca alla Fiorentina, a grilled rib eye with Tuscan flavors and green olive oil. And for dessert, baklava or real Italian gelato from Gelatomania in Watsonville.

Nico Ristorante Mediterraneo, San Carlos between Ocean and Seventh avenues, seats 60 indoors and out, and is open from noon until 3, and from 5 p.m. until 10. For reservations, call (831) 624-6545.

Aruba, Hawaii, Chez Christine and the Carmel Valley Chevron

By CHARYN PFEUFFER

THIS WEEK'S column is coming to you by way of Aruba. My mission to explore all of the ABC Islands is officially two-thirds complete. Curaçao was tackled earlier in the year and Bonaire is on my early-2008 "to visit" list. More on the "A" island of Aruba's eats and drinks when I return. So far, the local Balashi beer is treating me right.

In other travels, my beau and I had the pleasure of a five-day stay at The Four Seasons Resort Maui at Wailea (www.fourseasons.com/maui/) last week. The resort just underwent a $50 million makeover, and as a food, wine and travel writer with destination wedding and honeymoon clients, I try to (ahem) do my homework and stay on top of these developments. Hands down, it was the finest, most amenity-filled and flawless hotel service experience I've ever had. The highlights reel includes: Japanese Kobe beef at DUO, the property's newest restaurant. DUO is the only establishment on Maui serving the melt-in-your-mouth marbled delicacy, which is being flown in direct from Japan every third day. At $176 for a 6 oz. piece, it's a major splurge, but I can say with 100 percent certainty that this meat delivered a carnivorous experience I didn't know steer was capable of. The tasting menu at Wolfgang Puck's Spago also delivered above and beyond my expectations. The first suggested wine pairing? A Talbott Chardonnay. We hit the bar at Spago another evening for a light bite and talked a honeymooning twosome from Tampa into trying a bottle of Morgan Sauvignon Blanc. They loved it. Less extravagant, yet equally delicious were the creative sushi rolls at Sansei in Kihei — especially the panko-crusted ahi sashimi sushi roll with fresh island Yellowfin tuna.

■ Chez Christine needs our support

This bit of news came via my favorite gourmand on-the-go and all around Good Samaritan, Mary Chamberlin: Chez Christine (name after owner Michel Christine Richard) opened in Carmel a few months ago to rave reviews by local foodies (I admit, I have yet to go). Homemade bread, lightly battered artichoke hearts with handmade French garlic aioli, escargot (David Babcock of Clementine's Kitchen swears they are the best snails west of Paris), pureed chicken and mushroom soup with a touch of curry, and filet mignon au poivre with gratin of potato and gruyere are among the très Français menu items.

Christine gets up at 4 a.m. to bake the restaurant's bread and runs the front of the house. Her husband is the chef and her sons multitask as waiters and bus boys; their daughter-in-law kicks in wherever needed. The bad news is Christine's husband has fallen quite ill with leukemia and has no health insurance. Mounting medical bills, several surgeries on the horizon, sky-high restaurant and apartment rent, coupled with being a Carmel newcomer, are causing major financial stress on the family. Despite this, numerous sources have told me that the food and service hasn't skipped a beat. In the spirit of supporting family-owned establishments and spreading some kindness, I encourage you to go support Chez Christine. I'm making a reservation this week.

Friday lunch in the parking lot at the Chevron in Carmel Valley is a grilled frenzy not to be missed. Here's the deal: Every Friday, Joe Solis' Good Time Catering crew sets up its sprawling grilling spread in the Chevron parking lot. Pick your sandwich or plate and pay at the register inside the gas station, hand your ticket to someone manning the grill and walk away with a hefty portion of freshly grilled goodness.

Some of sandwich highlights include Kahlua Pulled Pork ($6.75), Tri-Tip ($7.75) or Joe's Big Boy Hamburger ($6.50). Heartier appetites may opt for the meal deals, which include potato salad, chili beans and garlic bread. The pork rib plate is a steal at $8.50.

Or take home a whole tri-tip for $21.50 and spare yourself from end-of-the-work-week cooking.

If you want to "dine in," there are also a few outdoor picnic tables with surprisingly lovely views of the valley.

tie up a dinghy, allowing for some great hiking. The island is divided between the National Park Service, which owns approximately 20 percent at the west, and The Nature Conservancy, which owns the rest. The property line is at Prisoner’s. I had purchased a landing permit from The Nature Conservancy but the group’s land was posted with “keep out” signs due to their pig eradication program.

So we hiked on the national park side, climbing to a summit where we could look out over at the Pacific rolling away to the south. We met an exceedingly entertaining skipper and his daughter near the top. They had sailed over from Santa Barbara and regaled us with funny stories about their anchoring experiences at Santa Cruz Island.

In our two-and-a-half days on the islands, we encountered about 10 people. The remoteness and solitude of the Channel Islands — only about 20 miles from California — are astounding. If you have not been to the Channel Islands, find a way to get there. Trips can be found in Ventura.

Although I enjoyed the weekend with Matt, I discovered that the deep joy I normally have when I sail was absent. Grieving and good times, for me at least, could not co-exist. I needed to get Athena home and end the Mexico/California voyage.

Seasickness and too much kelp

The return trip was set to begin the weekend of July 20. While the weather between Point Conception and Monterey can be challenging, the forecast seemed doable, though not ideal. Small craft advisories were up, with winds from 15 to 25 knots. I would have preferred less, but the boat was well prepared to handle those conditions.

Richard Henry Dana, in “Two Years Before the Mast,” gives an idea of how tough this stretch can be. On board Alert in December of 1835, his ship took 20 days to sail from Santa Barbara to San Francisco, getting hammered continually from Point Conception north. I figured we could make the 280-mile passage in about two days, employing our up-the-Baja strategy of a double-reefed mainsail and a hardworking engine. We would leave Ventura in the morning, get around Point Conception at night after the afternoon winds had subsided a bit, and keep right on going.

This approach would put us at notorious Point Sur early in the morning, the best time to pass that potentially furious promontory.

We were a crew of three: myself; my sailing buddy from Pacific Grove, Bob McCormick; and Bob’s friend, Richard Carr, of Monterey. Both are experienced sailors, though this was to be their first West Coast, uphill off shore experience. Richard has owned sailboats for years and keeps his current sloop on Chesapeake Bay.

Initially, everything went as planned. We left Ventura at 10:30 a.m. on July 21, with a full tank of diesel and 25 gallons of additional fuel in jerry cans on deck. The first time I brought Athena up from Ventura in 2003, we sailed all the way to the Cojo anchorage near Point Conception. On that trip we made two stops, first at Cojo and then at San Simeon.

This time there was not enough wind to sail, so we motor sailed to Point Conception. We were barely underway when Richard got seasick. His past experiences with seasickness had been transitory: He got sick and then recovered and was fine. His luck ran out on this trip.

He valiantly stood his three-hour watch the first night, a mildly rough ride up from Point Conception and past Point Arguello, Point San Martin and Point Buchon. On Sunday he was pretty much comatose all day and was unable to hold down either food or water. Richard is a trooper and never complained. Late in the afternoon, after we had passed Point Piedras Blancas and were beginning our ride up the Big Sur Coast, we realized that Richard was in much worse shape

More than nine months after he sailed out of Monterey Harbor for what was supposed to be a pleasure trip to Mexico, Paul Brocchini finally returned home, but without his wife, Nellie, who died of a brain hemorrhage last March 28 in Baja California. Here, Brocchini and his sailing friend, Bob McCormick, approach the slip in Monterey.

We decided his safety trumped our schedule, so we turned the boat around, sailed south past Point Piedras Blancas and headed east to the gorgeous San Simeon anchorage. We anchored there about 5 p.m., deployed our dinghy, and dinked Richard into the beach.

I was a bit nervous about the beach landing as the only other time I had landed there, in July of 2003 with Nellie, we got swamped, flipped the dinghy in the surf and drowned the outboard motor. This time Bob and I engineered a perfect landing and left a very happy Richard on the beach waiting for his wife to drive from Monterey to pick him up.

We returned to the boat, prepared dinner and took an hour nap before departing in the pitch black at 10:30. We motored out to the green entrance buoy, raised the main, turned right and began to motor sail back out to Point Piedras Blancas

We had one more adventure in store for us. We had noted immense beds of kelp near shore when we came in during the afternoon. We had totally forgotten about them and in the pitch black innocently motored into a vast forest of kelp. The boat came to a dead stop.

There are a couple of ways to rid your rudder, prop and keel of kelp. One is merely to stop, and sometimes the kelp will drop off. Another is to run the prop alternately in forward and reverse to cut it off the prop. A third way is to use the boat pole to pull the kelp out from under the boat.

We tried all of these and nothing worked.

By now it was 11:30 p.m., and we were not going anywhere. I decided to get into the water in back of the boat, going down the swim ladder with a very sharp fishing knife to try to cut the kelp away.

By the time I got undressed and into the water, the kelp had miraculously fallen away. My chance for mini-heroism having vanished, I hopped back into the boat, dried off, got dressed and got the boat underway.

We got stuck in the kelp a few more times but were able to free ourselves rapidly until we finally cleared the spindly traps. It was midnight, and Bob and I were at last on the last leg.

It was a windy, bashy, cold and miserable night and morning with intermittent fog that reduced our visibility to almost zero

With the help of our radar and sturdy autopilot, we chugged away, clearing Point Sur around noon, passed Point Lobos and crossed Carmel Bay between 4 and 5 p.m., rounded Point Pinos at 6, and backed to our slip, A77 at Monterey Harbor, at 7 p.m. on July 23.

My friend Jean Du Preez and his 2 year-old son, Luc, were on hand to greet us.

After nine months and 15 days, the momentous — and tragic — Athena voyage had ended.

hazardous. The wire was moved to the east side of the street and marked with yellow tape. The cable company was notified and all units returned to the station.

Carmel-by-the-Sea: Fire engine responded to a request for assistance to public works for a grease spill at Monte Verde and Sixth. Engine on scene. Crew assisted with the application of four bags of absorbent along the north side of Sixth, the parking lot entrance and the walkway for a spill of approximately 10 to 15 gallons of tallow that had spilled from a drum while being picked up. The building inspector was on scene and conducting a followup with the tallow company and cleanup efforts.

She lives just outside in the county area, but just in case an incident may arise, she wanted Carmel P.D. to know. She also made a report with the Monterey County Sheriff's Office.

Express into the valley, also pitched in.

“People tend to know about Cima Collina, Galante and Southern Latitudes, but the others — it’s fun to introduce people to them,” Potter said, including The Cheese Shop in Carmel Plaza, Nielsen Bros. Market, La Bicyclette and Bouchée. It also lists Bubbly Fish, the caviar and Champagne restaurant across the walkway from Cima Collina.

Locations highlighted outside Carmel are Ventana Vineyards/Meador Estate on Highway 68, Morgan’s new tasting room in the Crossroads, The Bountiful Basket in the Barnyard, Chateau Julien, Heller Estate and Bernardus.

“What we really want people to do is go walking for a day and then driving for a day, or take the Grapevine Express,” Potter said.

The wedding-themed brochure is ready to print but needs an advertiser to help defray costs so the chamber isn’t stuck with the full bill, according to Potter. Since businesses related to nuptial planning and celebrations are too numerous to list, the piece provides information about “things like how to have a wedding on the beach, how to get a marriage license and the weather in Carmel,” Potter said. It will serve as a “companion piece” to the chamber’s “Guide to Carmel.”

The relocation brochure will follow a similar pattern, describing how to obtain a business license, tax rates, important phone numbers, and other useful information for anyone planning a move to Carmel-by-the-Sea.

decades, the Cape of Good Hope to see jack-ass penguins, Zambia to see Victoria Falls and, of course, safari adventures.

“I have found the South Africa safari experience to be superior to the East Africa experience,” Presser said.

Presser said, ideally, visitors on the trip will see the “big five,” of African game — lion, leopard, elephant, rhino and buffalo.

“In the evening you find a lovely spot and put out a table with tablecloths and have what is known as a sundowner,” he said. “You watch the animals as you have an evening cocktail in the bush. It’s fabulous.”

The EARS safari will also include game viewing from boats, Presser said.

“Watching the animals as they come to the shoreline to drink is a phenomenal experience,” he said, “because there are no trees to block the wide panoramic views. Every moment is chock full of excitement as your safari drifts down river.”

Boys choir concert benefit

While EARS has two main fundraising events — a dinner, dance and auction and a car show called EARS & GEARS, — Sammut said he hopes the safari and a Nov. 3 concert by the 40-member All-American Boys Chorus will be regular events.

“It will be the chorus’ first time in Monterey County,” he said. “They go all over the world. It’s going to be a very interesting concert. They will be filmed with the animals.”

Other fundraising events are needed since EARS’ overhead costs are going up while the funds raised every year remain about the same.

“These two events, which we would like to do every year, should allow us to comfortably care for the elephants,” he said.

Tickets for the All-American Boys Chorus cost $75 per person, with a VIP reception offered at $125 per person, including premium seating, cocktails and an hors d’oeuvres reception. To purchase tickets or for more information, call EARS at (831) 455-3180.

annually, according to city figures.

But another figure provided to The Pine Cone shows the cumulative employee experience lost to the job cuts amounts to about 265 years.

“I have a concern about losing the knowledge and experience that a lot of these employees have,” said city councilman Alan Cohen. “I see the tradeoff as a hard thing to swallow.”

Colangelo said most of the 16 employees would be able to retain their jobs but would have to settle for a pay cut. He said in some cases, the newly drawn positions would require less responsibility, which he said could merit the adjustment in salary.

The reorganization also calls for the city’s youth center to be run by the Boys and Girls Club and the YMCA to operate the city’s youth soccer and basketball recreation leagues. Colangelo said the contracts would provide the same service at a lower cost.

But a woman who worked as a former recreation coordinator with the city until a few months ago said seeking outside help to run the city’s recreation department would mean a lower quality of service.

“There is a severe disconnect with outsourcing,” she said, “and that’s what you will bring to the City of Pacific Grove...”

Colangelo said the consolidation of city services would mean better overall customer service and an improvement in the city’s building inspection services. He also said the city would explore the possibility of privatizing some services.

Longtime resident Ted Hollister told council members the layoffs would be a further blow to the spirit of city employees.

“In 48 years,” he said, “I have have never seen employee morale as low as it is now.”

Councilwoman Vicki Stilwell said the council was aware of the problem and said it had to change.

“Morale sucks in this town,” she said.

Surprisingly, no employees affected by the layoffs addressed the city council. One employee, who wanted to remain anonymous, suggested a possible reason for the silence.

“Public comment is discouraged,” according to the employee. “And the word ‘insubordination’ has come up more than once.”

Students often attempted to distract McCourt from the normal parts of the curriculum by asking about his former life in Ireland. Fortunately, it was recounting those tales that would lead him to write his first memoir three decades later, when he retired from teaching.

The kids told him he should write a book, according to McCourt. “And I do what I’m told.” He described the desire to draft the memoir as “an itch,” and he finished the work in 13 months. It became a best seller.

Just for starters

McCourt’s Friday-night appearance was preceded by offerings of select Monterey County wines, hors d’oeuvres from A Moveable Feast, nibbles offered by The Carmel Cheese Shop, and every author’s book offered for sale in the Sunset Center lobby by Borders.

Throughout the evening, many attendees remarked that the festival seemed a perfect new match for the city’s beautifully renovated cultural center. But the Friday was just the beginning

Saturday and Sunday, authors took turns lecturing from the Sunset Center main stage, signing books and conferring in small “breakout sessions.”

Elizabeth Edwards, breast-cancer survivor and wife of presidential candidate John Edwards, was Saturday morning’s headliner and was invited to talk about her book, “Saving Graces,” and her experiences fighting cancer.

Margot Petit Nichols, a lifelong bibliophile and former book reviewer for The Pine Cone, described the festival as “a smashing success.”

“Every detail had been attended to,” she said. “Everybody was happy and said how wonderful it was.”

Nichols spent the weekend listening to the authors who made their presentations in the main auditorium, rather than attending the breakout sessions. Students of various ages from public and private schools around the Peninsula introduced the speakers.

Nichols particularly enjoyed Irshad Manji, described by the New York Times as “Osama bin Laden’s worst nightmare” and recipient of Oprah Winfrey’s inaugural Chutzpah Award for “audacity, nerve, boldness and conviction,” according to festival organizers.

“She does have chutzpah,” Nichols confirmed, adding that Manji talked about her upbringing in a Muslim neighborhood in America.

Investigative reporter, New Yorker magazine contributor and author Seymour Hersh discussed the possibility of war in Iran and the conditions in Iraq. While he sees war with Iran as highly likely, he urged his listeners not to despair.

“He left on an optimistic note,” she said, marveling that “he spoke absolutely without notes and is just on fire about his subject.”

Afghani-born, American-educated Tamin Ansary, who wrote “West of Kabul, East of New York,” discussed hopping on a plane from Cairo to Kabul for his first visit and landing without any idea of what to do or where to go.

He ultimately found his home village and former family compound — since bombed to destruction in wartime — and the grave of his father.

Jason Roberts chronicled the life of a blind man who traveled the world and managed to “see” more during his journeys because he was not distracted by the physical sights in his book, “A Sense of the World, How a Blind Man Became History’s Greatest Traveler.”

“He spoke the way I imagine he writes — it was just beautiful,” Nichols recalled.

Presidential historian and Pulitzer Prize winner Doris Kearns Goodwin closed the festival Sunday afternoon with an hour-long lecture on “The Political Genius of Abraham Lincoln,” the subject of her latest book.

“She really made him come alive,” Nichols said. “She is quite a dry person but really warms to her subject.”

Goodwin also reportedly diverged onto the topic of another of her passions: baseball.

Nichols remarked that every detail, even the tasty box lunches and the colorful flags outside Sunset Center, combined to provide a memorable festival complemented by superlative weather and the pleasure of seeing many familiar faces.

“It fulfilled all my expectations, and I was just so impressed,” she said. “There were no hitches or glitches, as far as I could tell. Everything was on time, the audience was receptive, and the longer speakers had many questions from the audience.”

She was by no means alone in her praise.

At Tuesday’s Carmel City Council meeting, attorney and resident Skip Lloyd said the festival and Sunset Center are a perfect match.

Mayor Sue McCloud, who attended all three days, proclaimed it a great success and said the McGillens have already secured next year’s dates.

Considering Carmel’s founding fathers advertised more than 100 years ago for “brain workers,” McCloud said, “your brains worked overtime” at the inaugural Carmel Authors and Ideas Festival.

“We are indebted to Jim and Cindy McGillen, and I hope we will have them at the next council meeting to thank them personally,” McCloud said.

Bottle-stealing suspect picked up

A SEASIDE man was arrested on Mission Street Saturday morning after a witness reported he was removing items from a restaurant’s recycling bin. And while taking bottles and cans is illegal — since they belong to the user and then become the property of the recycling company after they’re put out for pickup — it was an outstanding warrant that landed 49-year-old Benjamin Bello in jail, according to Carmel Police Cpl. Steve Rana.

Bello’s traffic warrant, issued out of Salinas, included charges for providing false information, being an unlicensed driver, running a stop sign and having no insurance, Rana said.

He was arrested and taken to Monterey County Jail.

WATER

with all the water it needs, collectively they could, he said.

A combination of solutions

To provide the Peninsula with 12,500 acre-feet of water per year, the plan calls for 8,330 AFY of desalination, 300 acre-feet of stormwater reuse, 150 acre-feet from conservation, 920 acre-feet of aquifer storage and recovery, 2,500 acre-feet of groundwater replenishment and 300 AFY of recycled water. A larger regional plan, which could be expanded in another phase, could provide as much as 28,400 acre-feet of water.

One acre-foot of water is 325,851 gallons, which is enough to provide for three families for about one year.

The group has identified about 1,700 acre-feet of water it could “implement immediately,” including conservation, stormwater reuse, aquifer storage and recovery, and desalination from Sand City’s plant, which alone would provide 300 acre-feet per year.

“We are calling some of these projects the low-hanging fruit,” Kasower said. “These are projects that could get going easily.”

Although Kasower said a component such as stormwater reuse isn’t a “big-ticket item,” and on its own won’t provide the Peninsula with a large amount of water, he argued it’s one piece of the puzzle.

“Why not do it even if it’s two acre-feet?” he asked.

The stormwater would be captured in parking lots and directed to aquifers. Oils and pathogens would be removed as the water percolated through layered berms.

Big dollars saved

Besides being a more environmentally friendly solution to solving the Peninsula’s water supply problems, Kasower said a multi-component project would cost much less than Cal Am’s Coastal Water Project.

“We are looking at a magnitude of perhaps $100 million or so savings,” Kasower said.

But it’s unknown exactly how much each component would cost. Kasower said the group is still seeking more studies to determine that. It’s also unknown how long it would take to implement the components.

But Kasower said the community probably can’t wait. “We don’t know when the state water board will put the hammer down” and start imposing fines for overpumping from the Carmel River, Kasower said.

One of the more ambitious projects includes using treated sewage to recharge aquifers from which drinking-water is drawn. Although off-putting, the method is being used in Los Angeles and Orange counties, Israel said.

“The water would go through microfiltration, reverse osmosis, ultraviolet disinfection and hydrogen peroxide treatment and be brought up to beyond drinking water quality,” he said.

After being treated, the water would be injected into the Seaside aquifer, where it would remain for about a year before being distributed to Cal Am customers.

The project, which would provide at least 2,500 acre-feet per year, would be the first of its kind in Northern California, Israel said.

Admittedly, however, there is a public relations challenge in convincing customers that drinking treated wastewater is palatable and safe.

“It’s very hard to get people to understand that this technology is not rocket science, it’s not new,” Kasower said. “The community is going to have to become comfortable with this.”

P.G. Historic Home Tour

MORE THAN a dozen homes will be featured on the 38th Annual Historic Home Tour in P.G. Sunday, Oct. 7.

Docents at each home will answer questions and provide historical information. The tour, which is from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m., benefits the Heritage Society of Pacific Grove, the Pacific Grove Arts Center and the P.G. Chamber of Commerce.

In conjunction with the home tours, local artists will gather in the 1881-built Chautauqua Hall to offer home decorations, fabrics, ceramics and jewelry for sale.

There will also be an auction of birdhouses fashioned after historic houses, with bidding closing at 2:45 p.m. Admission to Chautauqua Hall is free.

Tickets for the Historic Home Tour are $20 each and are available to the chamber of commerce. Call (831) 373-3304 for more information.

Making yourself too expensive

IT HAPPENED with the steel mills, the newspapers, the TV networks and the airlines, and now it’s happening with public employees: Their salaries and benefits have gotten to be so generous, the only way to control costs is to eliminate jobs, if not whole departments.

Consider the airlines. They began as high-end purveyors of luxury services to wealthy customers. There was so much profit to be made delivering business executives and socialites from New York to Chicago or Los Angeles, airline owners became very rich and pilots were rewarded with sky-high salaries. But with the advent of larger airplanes, airfares began to fall and flying became a mass phenomenon. As demand for air travel increased, discount airlines such as Laker and Southwest began to appear — airlines that paid their pilots $100,000 instead of $300,000 per year, and flight attendants less than half of what they were making at Pan Am and TWA. Unable to compete with the discount carriers on fares, these legacy carriers asked their employees to take substantial pay cuts. In some cases, they refused. The result was that several airlines were forced to stop flying altogether.

Likewise, in the early 1960s, a newspaper strike in New York resulted in higher wages — but many of the union members who collected those wages lost their jobs altogether when four dailies went out of business in the next few years.

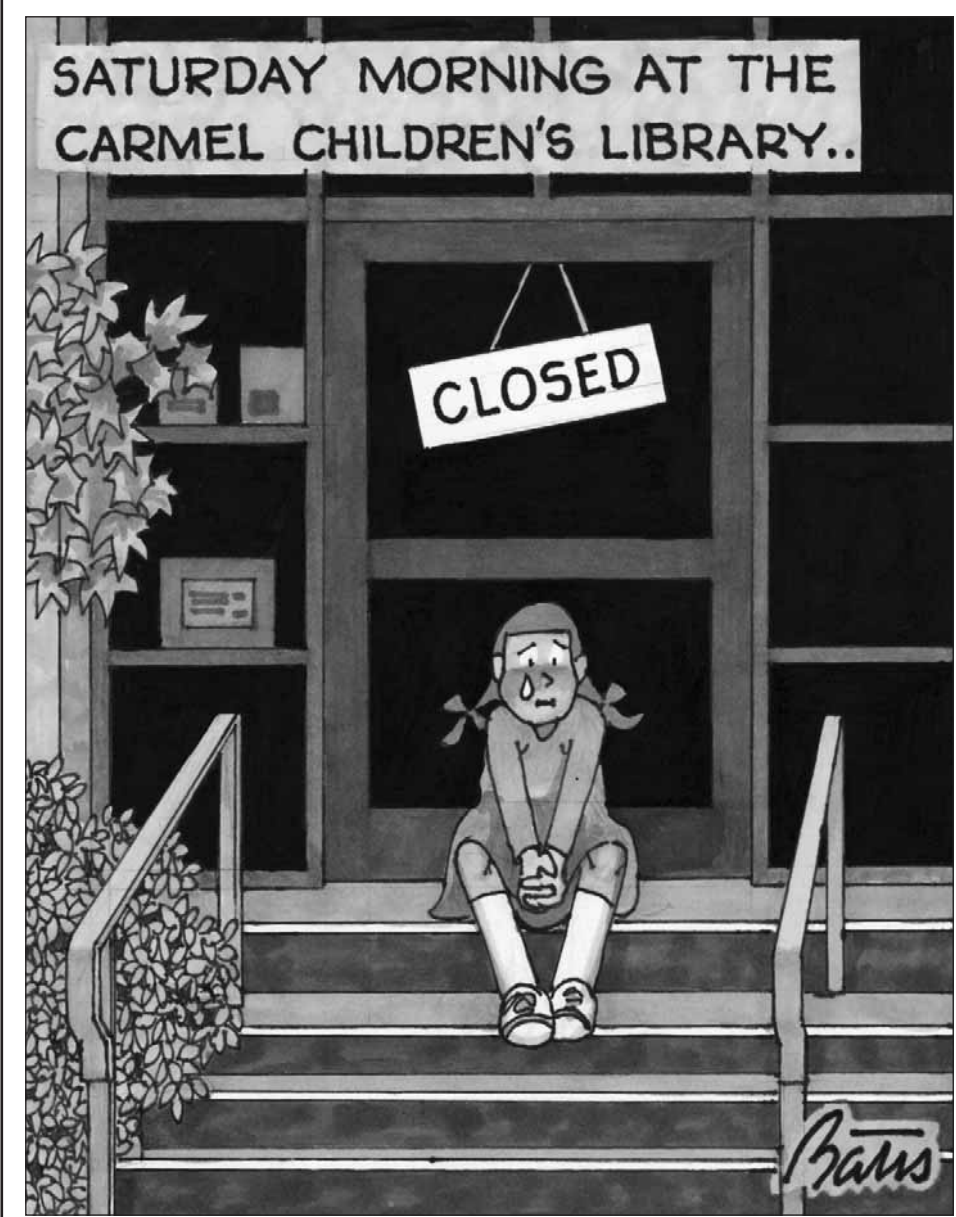

It was a result foretold by President John F. Kennedy, who was quoted by the Associated Press during the strike as criticizing union leaders for “attempting to impose a settlement that could shut down several newspapers in New York and throw thousands out of work.”

In more recent years, television networks such as NBC and CBS responded to sharply escalating costs at their overseas bureaus by closing most of them.

With mid-level municipal employees earning salaries and benefits well over $100,000 per year, and with ridiculously generous retirement packages being negotiated year after year, the same thing is happening with public employees. Even firehouses are being consolidated or shut down, because firefighters cost so much to keep on the payroll.

Every working person deserves to be paid a fair wage. Collective bargaining is an important tool toward this end. But if wages and benefits get to be too high, the result — even for valued employees — may not be a pay cut, but a pink slip.

Letters to the Editor

What emergency ?

Dear Editor,

Though I have attended all of the meetings and read all of the information concerning the United States Department of Agriculture and California Department of Food and Agriculture plan to once again spray our town, I still don’t understand why the light brown apple moth is considered an emergency.

The only losses claimed to justify this LBAM emergency are financial losses to the already subsidized ag industry, and the potential loss of a $15 million contract to Suterra, Inc.

The LBAM is not a serious public health threat, so why does the state have the right to blanket our town with an untested and undisclosed chemical spray?

The scientists and staff at CDFA, etc., wish for us all to believe we are being sprayed with a natural pheromone and guarantee it is harmless. But these are not benevolent moth scents drifting down upon us. CheckMate is not a natural pheromone. It is a synthetic chemical compound mixed with a synthetic encapsulating agent, and neither has been used in residential areas before. It is designed to adhere to surfaces for 30 days and is not water soluble.

I understand that the CheckMate spray will be diluted, however, I find it totally unacceptable that it is being sprayed over our town no matter how benign the scientists claim it to be. There are other options for controlling LBAM.

The local papers are advising us to put our “faith in the scientists” because the scientists can be trusted to protect the public. The scientists have promised us that DDT (oops) CheckMate is safe to spray over residential areas.

I live on the Monterey Peninsula because we have clean air and water and a coastline protected from pollution by the National Marine Sanctuary.

I am outraged that my family is being forced to breathe these chemicals to protect the financial interests of big business and protect consumers in China from buying fruit with blemishes.

I have never seen so many members of our community from all walks of life unite in opposition to any issue. Our city councils are nearly unanimous in their opposition — this is unprecedented.

I urge all other concerned citizens to call all local, state and federal representatives and ask what is the emergency that enables our government to subject our families to an experiment against our wishes. We should also be asking why this spraying has been forced upon us without sufficient time to respond to this attack on our civil rights.

It is not too late to stop the spraying — the CDFA has an emergency order that allows them to spray us every 30 to 60 days until 2010.

Seeking say in coastal trail route, Big Sur locals to meet

By CHRIS COUNTS

A NONPROFIT hiking group and a state agency want to create a foot trail that spans the California coast from Oregon to Mexico. A handful of Big Sur locals want a say in where the trail goes.

The Big Sur Lodge Conference Center will host a meeting Tuesday, Oct. 9, to discuss creating a steering committee of local residents who could help guide the planning process for the Big Sur section of the California Coastal Trail. But it is unclear how much input the hikers' group — the

Sunset fundraiser highlights gifted young performers

TO RAISE money for the fight against pediatric cancer, Sunset Center will host a fundraising event Saturday, Oct. 13, that showcases five talented young entertainers.

Performing at the "Rising Stars, Raising Funds" benefit will be comedian Sydney Park (age 9), pianist Marc Yu (age 8), vocalist Susan May (age 16), magician Chad Juros (age 18) and the a cappella group, 'Til Dawn which features 13 singers from 14 to 18.

Tickets are $30 for adults and $15 for children. For more information, call (831) 620-2048 or visit www.sunsetcenter.org. For more about the effort to beat pediatric cancer, visit www.letsbeatthis.org.

Supervisors: Not all is well in Carmel Highlands

By KELLY NIX

THE MONTEREY County Board of Supervisors Wednesday imposed a 45-day ban on new development and new wells in Carmel Highlands, citing state concerns over health and safety issues.

The ban, unanimously approved by supervisors, is intended to allow the county to come up with a better plan to manage the area's sewage, directed by the Regional Water Quality Control Board.

Fifth District Supervisor Dave Potter said the supervisors couldn't ignore the directive from the regional water board to stop development until a plan is formulated.

"If we don't proceed as directed, the water board is going to take over permanent authority," Potter said. "I think it's not very responsible for us to say, 'OK, let's see what happens.'"

The management plan, which the county has until Dec. 1 to complete, will identify criteria for making sure sewage from septic systems isn't posing a health hazard.

The state is concerned the fractured granite geology of the Highlands could allow effluent from wastewater disposal systems to seep into groundwater, which is then tapped by private wells.

Mike Grachek, owner of Granite Drilling Co., told supervisors his company has drilled many wells in the Carmel Highlands and never encountered a problem.

"I know for a fact there has never been septic intrusion in any well we have drilled in the Carmel Highlands," Grachek said.

John Bridges, attorney for Rick Kashfi, who wants to build a 5,200-square-foot home in the Highlands with a well and septic system, urged the board to resist the temporary moratorium.

"There is no health threat," Bridges said. "There is no apocalypse. There is no record whatsoever of any water problems in the Highlands."

Richard LeWarne, the county's assistant director for environmental health, said over the years there have been two cases of septic contamination in the Highlands.

Besides wells, the 45-day building moratorium applies to subdivisions, bedroom additions, new dwellings or guest houses, and new or expanded commercial activities.

County environmental health director Allen Stroh said the purpose of the study is to prevent any problems, and the county will try to have the study completed as quickly as possible to create the least amount of burden to property owners.

"I keep hearing over and over again, 'Show me the bodies,' so to speak," Stroh said. "The regional board in essence is saying, 'We don't want the bodies.'"

Sebastapol-based Coastwalk — and the state agency — the California Coastal Conservancy — are willing to offer residents.

"We have been asked by the coastal conservancy to propose a community-based steering committee," explained Big Sur resident Jack Ellwanger.

Getting to this point hasn't been easy, though. "It's been a royal battle," Ellwanger said. "We've gone eye-to-eye and toe-to-toe with them, and it's a great victory for the community to get the ability to develop a proposal that could drive the whole process."

The coastal conservancy has awarded $175,000 to a consulting firm to prepare a plan for the Big Sur section of the trail. If the agency decides to work with the local steering committee, Ellwanger hopes the group's role is more than just ceremonial.

"If we're going to have a trail, let's see what the community wants to do," he suggested.

Ellwanger said the local community has a great track record of taking care of the coast, and the coastal trail's organization should realize that.

"Big Sur residents developed the state's first land use plan," Ellwanger noted. "That's why we don't have billboards here. The people who live here love this place and want to protect it."

While the coastal trail doesn't yet exist, a website dedicated to the trail — www.californiacoastaltrail.info — presents a route that would mostly be adjacent to existing roads as they pass through vast stretches of private land.

"The trail, by necessity, follows State Highway 1 or secondary roads — the Old Coast Road from Bixby Bridge to Andrew Molera State Park and the Coast Ridge Road from the Ventana Inn area to Kirk Creek Campground," the website says.

But when the trail reaches Big Sur's south coast, hikers would be able to get away from traffic and into more remote territory via the existing Cruikshank and Buckeye trails, which are located in Los Padres National Forest.

The web-site also offers a disclaimer, reminding readers nothing is set in stone.

"The coastal trail alignment shown on these maps has not been sanctioned by any agency of the State of California ..."

On the website, the coastal trail's organizers imply they are interested in working with local communities.

"Where the trail does not yet exist, local volunteers are working with local and regional organizations and state and federal agencies to suggest and to evaluate possible routes," the site says.

Ellwanger hopes the coastal trail's organizers are sincere. In the meantime, he's encouraging residents to get involved in the process, even if they oppose the trail.

"It is up to us to propose how that committee should be composed, how it should comport itself, and what its purpose and scope are," he added. "Everyone's ideas and opinions are welcome."

The meeting starts at 5 p.m. The conference center is located inside Pfeiffer Big Sur State Park, about 26 miles south of Carmel.

IS GRANDCHILD CARE A STRAIN?

If you are a parent who is concerned that leaving your children with your own parents will be too stressful for grandma and grandpa, try not to worry. Recent research challenges the conclusions of previous studies, which held that the exertion and stress of caring for children takes a toll on grandparents. Authors of the latest study, which included nearly 13,000 participants, said the previous studies were too small to reach valid conclusions. In addition, many of the grandparents in previous studies were taking care of grandchildren whose mothers were in jail or taking drugs. The new study saw no health declines among grandparents who babysat or otherwise cared for their grandchildren.

If you have a loved one who needs care, please consider VICTORIAN HOME CARE/RESIDENTIAL CARE HOMES. We are affiliated with the National Association of Professional Geriatric Care Managers, American Society of Aging, and California Association for Health Services at Home, California Association of Residential Care Homes and The American Nurses Association. We provide the best home care and geriatric care management for seniors or adults with physical and/or mental challenges in and around Monterey and Santa Cruz Counties.

P.S. Grandparent/grandchildren interaction can help both generations. While grandparents get an infusion of youthful perception, grandchildren may learn good values and behavior.

NON-SHRINKING POSSIBILITIES

When a tooth is extracted, the ridge of alveolar bone that once held it in place begins to shrink (resorb). As a result, an overlying denture will increasingly find itself on an unstable foundation. This leads to the denture becoming looser and looser until it eventually has to be refitted/refabricated. For this reason alone, many patients turn to dental implants to replace lost teeth. This prosthetic device so closely approximates the look and function of a natural tooth root that it minimizes bone resorption. Once the titanium anchor is placed in the bone to function much like a natural tooth root, it becomes integrated with the bone, thereby minimizing bone loss. This provides a solid anchor for replacement teeth.

To receive implants, you need to have healthy gums and adequate bone to support the implant. You must also commit to keeping these structures healthy. Meticulous oral hygiene and regular dental visits are critical to the long-term success of dental implants. For more information or to schedule an appointment, please call our office. Open by appointment, we accept most insurances and credit cards.

P.S. Implants can be used to anchor a denture (containing several teeth) in place, or it can hold a single replacement tooth.

Dr. di Bari, is a dentist in private practice at 20 Dormody Ct. here in Monterey. He may be reached at 373-3703.
