The 119th U.S. Open got underway at Pebble Beach Thursday under skies that were a mixture of sun and clouds – adding a touch of scenic drama to the competition on the links. Above, Jason Day hits his tee shot on 9 as he heads toward a 1-under score of 70 for the opening round, while Phil Mickelson (top left) shot 72, and Dustin Johnson finished at even par. ## Cell towers rejected in residential zone

By MARY SCHLEY

WHILE REPRESENTATIVES from Verizon Wireless argued Wednesday that the city had no choice but to approve five new cellular sites in Carmel’s residential neighborhoods because rejecting them would violate state and federal laws, the planning commission unanimously disagreed, paving the way for an appeal to the city council.

The cell phone antennas would be installed on PG&E poles on San Antonio Avenue, 10th Avenue and on Lincoln and Mission streets. Equipment would be attached to the poles near their bases and on top, extending their heights to between 40 and 50 feet from their existing 29 to 38 feet.

Senior planner Marnie Waffle recommended denial of the permits, as did the 11 people who spoke at the meeting and the 30-plus who commented via email.

City gets legal help

While some federal and state laws limit the power cities have over cell phone equipment, Waffle said the commission could nonetheless deny the application based on conflicts with the general plan, zoning code and other guidelines.

The city also hired an outside firm that specializes in this area of law. “Their advice was that we shouldn’t assume our codes are preempted by federal and state law,” planning director Marc Wiener said, particularly those about aesthetics.

The city’s zoning code prohibits installation of wireless communication facilities anywhere in the single-family-residential district, which makes up most of the town, Waffle pointed out in her June 12 report.

“The size of the equipment area would add unreasonable visual clutter to the utility pole at a height readily visible to the public and adjacent private residences,” she said.

Letting Verizon install the towers would also open the door

Morse: ‘Get the most out of every day’

The memoirs of Pebble Beach Co. founder S.F.B. Morse, written in the late 1960s, paint a vivid picture of how he developed perhaps the most legendary golf resort in the world, while also helping make the Monterey Peninsula one of the greatest places to call home. Here are some of his closing thoughts.

See TOWERS page 22A

IT HAS been suggested that this work of art, or whatever it may be called, would not be complete without a statement of my own philosophy. Perhaps through what I have written, I have dropped a hint as to how I feel about things, but I will attempt to express my conclusions about business and life in general, realizing that I may be repeating myself.

If I were asked to give advice to any young man, I would tell him to get all the education he can, everything available to him in his youth. It doesn’t make too much difference what kind; it is the mental exercise which equips you for the battle of life. I would advise him also to take an active part in the extracurricular life in school and in college. That is just as important, in my opinion, as studies. School and college are a little world in themselves. Then I would tell him to try to find

Father drowns trying to rescue son at ‘Mortuary Beach’

By MARY SCHLEY

A SAN Jose man drowned at Monastery Beach Saturday afternoon trying to save his young son after the boy ran down to the surf and got toppled by a wave, according to Sean James, safety superintendent for California State Parks.

Heading to Big Sur for the day, two families from San Jose stopped to picnic at Monastery Beach, choosing to sit high up on the sand in a safe spot well away from the surf, James said. But at around 2 p.m., one of the kids, a 6-year-old boy, ran down the slope toward the water.

“The boy’s father yelled for him to stop, but a wave was already coming in and knocked the child down,” James said. His father, 33-year-old Sridhar Ekambaram, “tried to grab his son but couldn’t reach him, and then he got knocked down by another wave.”

Rescuer jumps in

A man, later identified as Marc Schroeder, saw what was happening, rushed in and pulled the little boy out of the surf, according to James. “The good Samaritan tried to reach the father as well but was unsuccessful,” he said.

In a TV interview, Schroeder said he and his wife were at the beach when they saw the boy and his father in the surf. He hesitated, but his wife encouraged him to go after them.

“I stripped down to my underwear and I ran out there,” he said. “All of a sudden, I see the dad getting pulled out, and his son is getting pounded by huge waves.” He was able to bring the boy to shore, and nearly rescued the father. “I got him by his shirt and I started swimming on my back,” he said. “I got him almost all the way in, to where literally my knees were on the sand,” but a large wave separated them.

Bystanders then saw Ekambaram floating face down in the water beyond the breaking waves, and within a few minutes, his body sank below the surface of the water and wasn’t seen again, according to James.

Cal Fire sent a rescue boat from Whalers Cove at Point Lobos, the California Highway Patrol scrambled a helicopter, state parks sent its lifeguards, and the Monterey County Sheriff’s Dive Team and the U.S. Coast Guard went to help with the rescue and search.

Emergency medics evaluated the boy at the beach, James said, and left him in the care of his friends

Sensory overload

KOKO WAS done. By age 5, she'd delivered as many puppies as she could, and her breeder, determined to offload any dog that couldn't produce, put an ad on Craigslist, offering the little French bulldog free to the first person willing to come get her.

Koko's new person didn't gather her small herd of Frenchies by ignoring ones in need, and when she saw Koko's listing, she called the guy and said she'd pay him to deliver Koko to her Salinas home. He accepted the cash.

"We haven't had a young dog in a while. It's more of a geriatric society at our house," her person said. "While the rest are sleeping, Koko's running what we call wheelies, dashing around in circles, skidding across rugs, and stopping only to see who's willing to play with her."

Koko is happy to have found her forever home. Yet she also knows her place among the other six dogs. She understands who's old and who has energy. She's calm and docile when she needs to be, her person said, reading the situation and finding her place in it.

"When everyone goes to bed at night, Koko climbs onto the farthest corner at the bottom and waits until everyone has found their place and gone to sleep," her person said. "Then she tucks herself in among the other dogs. Only then does she rest her head."

Her people sleep in whatever space is left.

sensory overload and is still getting used to her new life.

"We're easing her into things," her person said. "But, from what we've seen so far, she'll probably hit the sand running."

Attorneys to warn of risks involved in takeover of Cal Am

By KELLY NIX

AN ATTORNEY who three years ago successfully prevented a Southern California city from acquiring its private water system through eminent domain — and is now representing California American Water — called a government takeover attempt of the Monterey Peninsula's water system a "huge risk."

In November 2018, Peninsula voters passed Measure J, which calls for the Monterey Peninsula Water Management District to acquire Cal Am's water system through eminent domain if doing so would be financially feasible. A study is in the works to determine that.

The activist group that sponsored Measure J, Public Water Now, maintains that water supplied by a government-owned system would be more affordable, and it ran a campaign based on that premise.

At a meeting Monday of the water board, however, George Soneff, who represented Golden State Water Company in 2016 when the City of Claremont tried unsuccessfully to take it over, will make a presentation about the potential perils in using eminent domain to take over Cal Am's water system.

“The presentation is one of the few opportunities the public will have in hearing a contrary point of view during the feasibility study process,” Cal Am spokeswoman Catherine Stedman said. Soneff will be joined Monday by attorney Joe Conner, an attorney from Tennessee also working for Cal Am.

‘Need to be leery’

Among the things the lawyers will tell the water board is to not take at face value the conclusions of the consultants who were hired by the water district to analyze a Cal Am takeover bid.

The directors “need to be leery about what they get from the consultants, and generally need to keep an open mind” about the results, Soneff, of law firm Manatt, Phelps & Phillips, told The Pine Cone.

If the water board decides to use eminent domain to take over Cal Am, a court would first have to determine if the takeover was in the public interest, which is no slam dunk. And even if the district prevailed in that phase, a second court hearing would focus on the value of Cal Am's system.

"That valuation, that appraisal is very difficult," Soneff said. The directors "should push the consultants to give probability of success and what the cost would be to get through it."

‘Budget buster’

For example, what is the probability that the cost to acquire Cal Am is going to be $500 million or $1 billion — the amount the private water company has said it's worth. The cost, he said, "could be a budget buster."

And even if the water district prevailed in the first phase, which Soneff said could take several years to resolve, there's no guarantee it would get a favorable determination in the second phase, which could take another two years. And if the water district loses, it would not only be required to pay its legal bills but would also be ordered to pay for Cal Am's attorneys' fees, which could amount to millions of dollars.

Soneff said he will advocate for transparency and urge the water district to make all findings and materials available so water customers have a chance to “offer contrary or alternative analyses and to ask questions and probe the consultants” about their conclusions.

Monday's presentation was arranged after the water district refused to let the attorneys meet one-on-one with the directors. George Riley, the former Public Water Now director who spearheaded Measure J's passage, now sits on the board after being elected in No-

Police, Fire & Sheriff's Log

Native weasel seemed to be healthy

HERE'S A look at some of the significant calls logged by the Carmel-by-the-Sea Police Department and the Monterey County Sheriff's Office last week. This week's log was compiled by Mary Schley.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 22

Carmel-by-the-Sea: Subject arrested for providing a false name to officers, possession of drug paraphernalia, two outstanding felony no-bail warrants for fraud, identity theft and failure to appear in court. The 35-year-old female dancer from Sacramento was booked into Monterey County Jail.

Carmel-by-the-Sea: Multiple citizens flagged down an officer regarding an intoxicated male and female fighting at Del Mar and Ocean at 1517 hours. The male, a 49-year-old journalist from Oakland, was arrested for felony domestic violence and misdemeanor resisting arrest.

Carmel-by-the-Sea: Female at Junipero and Fifth reported a violation of a civil restraining order.

Carmel-by-the-Sea: Report of an intoxicated subject outside a business on Dolores north of Eighth. The 52-year-old was contacted and arrested for public intoxication.

Pacific Grove: A female on Asilomar Avenue reported that her ex-boyfriend broke a window and entered her residence looking for his cell phone.

Pacific Grove: One subject struck another on Buena Vista. Victim made citizen's arrest.

Pacific Grove: Adult protective services report on Lincoln Avenue.

Pacific Grove: A female on Adobe Lane reported that her adult brother intentionally slammed her fingers in a door.

Pacific Grove: A man brought in a dog to PGPD. The dog was found on Sea Palm Avenue. There was no owner information available. Update: Dog was returned to owner.

Pacific Grove: Subject reported suspicious circumstances on Central Avenue.

Carmel area: Deputies responded to the report of an attempted burglary on Carmel Rancho Boulevard. Case closed.

The gavel falls

Verdicts, pleas and sentencings announced by Monterey County District Attorney Jeannine Pacioni

April 10 — To ensure a fair playing field for lawful cannabis growers, the district attorney's office has settled a civil cannabis enforcement case against Justin Gregory Donnelly, 47, of Big Sur.

On September 21, 2017, a search warrant executed on Donnelly's property located on Argyle Road in southern Monterey County near King City revealed an unlawful cannabis cultivation operation. Donnelly did not have any state or county licenses or permits to grow cannabis on his property; 1,044 plants were seized and destroyed.

On April 2, Monterey County Superior Court Judge Marla O. Anderson approved and ordered a final judgment and injunction pursuant to stipulation, which includes a five-year injunction prohibiting Donnelly from cultivating cannabis without all proper state and county licenses and permits, a $94,961.29 civil penalty, and $5,038.71 in investigative costs.

April 11 — Carlos Ibarra, age 25, was found guilty after a jury trial of assault, theft, dissuading a witness, evading police, being a felon in possession of a firearm and ammunition, and attempting to conceal evidence.

On February 3, 2018, three people standing in a Safeway parking lot flagged down a Salinas police officer. One of the three reported that they had finished their purchases at Safeway and were sitting in their car when a brown truck pulled up to the passenger's side of the car at a high rate of speed. The reporting party said that two females got out of the truck and attacked his friend, who was sitting in the reporting party's back seat. Then, Ibarra got out of the driver's seat of the truck, approached the reporting party, told him not to call the police, and grabbed his cellphone out of his shirt pocket. When the reporting party tried to get his cell phone back, Ibarra assaulted him and then fled in the truck with the two females.

Salinas police officers were able to locate Ibarra's truck and attempted to pull him over. Ibarra initially stopped his truck. However, as the responding officers exited their patrol vehicles to approach, he sped off. Ibarra drove at a high rate of speed through residential areas and ran seven stop signs. Ibarra eventually gave up, stopped the truck, and surrendered to the police.

Ibarra's truck was searched, and officers located a gray pouch containing 9 mm bullets on the front passenger's seat. The male victim's cell phone was also located inside of the truck.

Despite legal threats, city on track to release Dallas harassment report

By MARY SCHLEY

A LAWYER representing former Mayor Steve Dallas sent a letter warning the city council against releasing the 2018 report detailing the investigation into sexual harassment allegations made against him. But during a closed session meeting last week, the council decided to proceed with plans to make the redacted report public June 20.

Drafted by independent investigator Irma Moisa, the 217-page document examined 21 accusations that Dallas behaved inappropriately, starting with a December 2017 complaint from the head of a local winegrowing association. After she spoke up, others reported their experiences as well, and former city attorney Glen Mozingo hired Moisa to look into them over the course of a three-month investigation.

While some were substantiated, none constituted sexual harassment that would make the city criminally or civilly liable — the question Mozingo said the investigation set out to answer.

When he announced the results in March 2018, Mozingo described seven incidents involving inappropriate comments or “leering” which were confirmed through accounts from the people who complained, witnesses, and the mayor’s own admissions. The council at the time chose to reprimand Dallas rather than force him out, and he later read a public apology. Dallas has since been replaced by Mayor Dave Potter.

Last month, the council, minus councilman Bobby Richards, who recused himself because he was part of the investigation, voted in closed session to release a redacted copy of the report.

After receiving the letter from Dallas’ attorney, the council discussed it again last week and reaffirmed its decision. The city has not yet provided a copy of the letter.

City attorney Jon Giffen said another lawyer, Jeffrey Sloan, has been advising the council on the matter and will determine what parts of the report should be redacted.

“The city intends to release the confidential investigation report electronically to members of the public who submitted the Public Records Act request to the city, and otherwise the report will be available in print if requested, subject to the city’s policy on printing cost pursuant to the Public Records Act,” Giffen said. The city charges 10 cents per page to reproduce documents.

City officials did not answer questions regarding how much the original investigation cost or how much the issue of releasing the report has cost, though Giffen said reopening the matter “is not cheap.”

Campers with asthma enjoy week in sun

THE MARK Velcoff, M.D. Asthma Camp is having its 34th annual session at Monterey Park School in Salinas from July 22 to July 26. Named for the late Dr. Velcoff, who co-founded it as Superkids Asthma Day Camp in 1986, the weeklong event allows kids ages 6-12 with asthma to get outside and play in a safe, supervised environment.

Now sponsored by Salinas Valley Memorial Healthcare System and Children’s Miracle

Network, the camp is supervised by local physicians and clinical volunteers from SVMH. In addition to running, swimming, playing soccer and other activities that kids with asthma sometimes shy away from, campers also learn more about the disease, what triggers it, and the medications they take. The cost is $55 per child and there are scholarships available. Registration closes July 15. For more information, call (831)759-1890.

Former casino worker enters guilty plea in murder of doctor

By KELLY NIX

THE LAS Vegas woman who had been charged with two other suspects for the murder of 71-year-old Community Hospital of the Monterey Peninsula psychiatrist Thomas Burchard instead pleaded guilty to a lesser crime Tuesday and has been released from jail pending sentencing, her attorney told The Pine Cone.

Diana Nicole Pena, 31, was charged with former Salinas resident Kelsey Nicole Turner and Jon Logan Kennison, both 26, of murdering Burchard. The doctor's body was found in Turner's abandoned Mercedes in the desert on the outskirts of Las Vegas in March. He had been beaten to death.

But Pena's attorney, Jess Matsuda, told The Pine Cone that his client pleaded guilty Tuesday to accessory to murder after the fact. Matsuda has said his client maintains she did not have anything to do with Burchard's death. It hasn't been disclosed precisely what Pena's role was in the crime.

"The potential punishment for this charge ranges from probation to up to five years in prison," Matsuda said Tuesday.

Matsuda declined to say whether Pena — a former Caesars Palace casino worker — would cooperate with prosecutors and testify against Turner and Kennison in the case. She was released from a Clark County jail Tuesday and will return to court when a sentencing date has been set.

"Sentencing probably won't occur until the co-defendants' cases are resolved," Matsuda said.

A grand jury last week indicted Turner, who is pregnant, and her boyfriend, Kennison, on murder and conspiracy to commit murder charges.

Turner and Burchard, police contend, had an intimate relationship. It's not clear what the motive was for his murder.

FEDS MAY USE HERBICIDE ON WEEDS

By CHRIS COUNTS

DECLARING WAR on weeds, the United States Forest Service wants to launch an ambitious invasive plant eradication program on wildlands in Big Sur and elsewhere in Los Padres National Forest — and the federal agency is considering using an herbicide, glyphosate, which California has declared a carcinogen, but the federal government maintains is safe when used properly.

Glyphosate — which is the main ingredient in Roundup — has been in the news since last August, when a San Francisco jury determined the herbicide was responsible for giving a man cancer and awarded him $289 million in damages. While the award was later reduced to $78 million, two other California court cases followed, including one last month that ordered the maker of Roundup, Monsanto — and the company which owns it, Bayer — to pay $2 billion to a couple suffering from cancer.

The forest service released an environmental study last month detailing the impacts of using "mechanical, manual, livestock and chemical treatment methods" to remove non-native vegetation. The public comment period ends June 19.

Forest service officials say the work is necessary because invasive plants displace native plants, reduce habitat and food sources for animals, make soil less productive, reduce water quality, and increase the risk of wildfire.

P.G. moves toward raising council salaries, offering medical benefits

By KELLY NIX

THE IDEA of serving the public used to be considered motive enough to serve as an elected official, but some members of the Pacific Grove city council are asking for a raise that could make them the highest paid council members on the Monterey Peninsula.

At the June 6 meeting, the council’s seven members discussed the idea of increasing — by as much as 100 percent — the $420 monthly salary for council members and $700 for mayor. Carmel pays its council members $150 per month and the mayor $200 monthly.

The council was mostly warm to the idea of increasing the pay, which city manager Ben Harvey brought to the council for consideration.

Councilman Nick Smith advocated for the salary to increase 100 percent, which would allow members to get $840 and the mayor $1,400 monthly. Smith cited the 20 years that have passed since the council last got a raise.

Because the council is permitted to increase its salary by 5 percent every year, but hasn’t done so in two decades, Harvey said the council could OK a 100 percent pay hike.

“You couldn’t increase your own salaries,” Harvey explained. “It would be an increase for” the next council in 2020.

Councilwoman Jenny McAdams, who was elected last fall, said the current pay, “unless you’re retired and wealthy,” is a “deterrent” to those considering running for office.

A 100 percent raise would cost taxpayers an additional $43,680 annually, the city said.

The council also weighed the idea of giving members medical benefits and cell phone stipends.

While the council can currently participate in the city’s medical plan, they have to pay 100 percent of the premium. A proposal would be for the city to contribute as much as $1,400 per month toward medical benefits.

The proposed pay increase and medical benefits however, didn’t get a favorable reception from citizens.

While resident Pam Rolph acknowledged that the council members spend time and energy in the work they do for the city, she said, “I think we need to acknowledge, as the public, that public service will always include substantial amounts of uncompensated work.”

Colleen Goldsmith said that while she’s not opposed to a pay increase, she was surprised to find it could double.

“That’s not a modest increase,” she said.

Health insurance would be much more expensive than increase salaries, and could cost taxpayers as much as $18,396 per year, per council member.

Resident Joy Colangelo said each council member was aware of how much they were going to be paid when they ran for their seat. “You have a different currency than just money,” Colangelo said. “You have a vote that other volunteers in this town don’t have.”

The city also allows council members to participate in CalPERS retirement plan. Resident Luke Coletti said a raise could mean bigger pensions. “Instead of giving themselves a raise, the should remove the CalPERS pension option,” he told The Pine Cone.

Councilman Joe Amelio said he ran for the position solely because he wanted to serve the city and had no idea the part-time job paid anything. He opposed an increase in pay.

While Carmel, Monterey, Seaside and Marina pay significantly less than the monthly $840 Pacific Grove would pay its council members if it opts to double the salary, every city but Marina contributes toward a medical plan for its members.

Harvey said he would return to the council with some options regarding the pay increase, health benefits and cell phone stipends.

New hotel plan for American Tin Cannery

By KELLY NIX

A DEVELOPER has proposed transforming the American Tin Cannery into a 225-room hotel featuring “executive” guest rooms, rooftop bar, ballroom, spa and fitness center, brew pub, swimming pools, retail shops and hundreds of parking spaces, according to plans submitted to the City of Pacific Grove this week.

The permit application submitted by the Comstock Homes company Tuesday shows that it has big plans for the underused American Tin Cannery, which operates as an outlet mall at 125 Ocean View Blvd. The hotel, simply referred in the plans as the American Tin Cannery Hotel and Commercial Project, would total 377,461 square feet, including parking.

“The project re-visions an underutilized former industrial site to hotel and commercial uses that will contribute to the community on many levels,” the application says. “In terms of economic benefit, the hotel will generate transient occupancy tax revenues to the city and increase property tax revenues resulting from project-related improvements and sales tax revenues from retail uses.”

Additionally, Comstock said the new businesses “associated with the project” would generate more than 135 jobs that will “provide employment opportunities for local residents that contribute to the local economy.”

The hotel would feature 104 executive guestrooms with access from Eardley Avenue, and 121 group/family rooms with access from Ocean View Boulevard, according to the plans that were made available to the public this week.

A total of 304 parking spaces would be included and valet parking would be an option. Architectural renderings also show swimming pools and a 4,700-square-foot brew pub.

Green roof and graywater

The hotel would feature sustainable elements, including a green roof with a mix of native and adaptive plant species and graywater for irrigation, “automated energy management,” automobile charging stations, and rainwater harvesting to provide an alternative water source for some of the building’s facilities. The developer would retain a “significant portion” of the original building to reduce construction waste.

The modern design would involve “smooth surfaces, corrugated metal siding, metal trim elements and wood textures” that the devel-

New commercial-residential complex for Dolores

By MARY SCHLEY

THE PLANNING commission got its first look Wednesday night at the downtown project proposed by the same wealthy Monaco man who plans to demolish two Scenic Road homes and build a new one with a pool. Patrice Pastor, who has purchased numerous properties in the city under the name Esperanza Carmel LLC, hired Pacific Grove architect Jun Sillano to design a new Mediterranean-style complex on the east side of Dolores south of Seventh.

The proposal calls for demolishing two existing commercial buildings — which Pastor’s LLC bought last October for $2.4 million, according to county records — and constructing a new two-story, 5,362-square-foot building with 2,689 square feet of commercial space on the ground floor and two apartments upstairs totaling 2,673 square feet. A 3,365-square-foot underground garage would include four parking spaces, private storage, a trash room and a mechanical room.

Built in the Spanish-Eclectic style, the complex would be clad in stucco and have bronze-painted wrought iron guardrails, a clay tile roof, faux limestone building accents, and bronze-clad doors and windows, according to Sillano’s plans. It would also have a small courtyard and a large rooftop deck.

While the uses are appropriate for the commercial zone, assistant planner Evan Kort said in his June 12 report, the building is slightly larger and taller than the rules allow, and only contains four parking spaces where seven are required. He also said the rules require it to be closer to the sidewalk than the 5-foot setback Sillano’s drawings show.

Residents in the building to the south, which also has a

JEHOVAH’S WITNESSES SUE OVER REAL ESTATE

■ Say they had right to buy property

By KELLY NIX

A GROUP of Jehovah’s Witnesses that rented property in Pacific Grove for nearly 50 years is suing its landlords, alleging they broke the terms of a longstanding agreement by not allowing it to purchase the property.

The Kingdom Hall of Jehovah’s Witnesses contends that for more than 47 years, it has leased the 1100 Sunset Drive property where its place of worship, the Kingdom Hall, is located.

But in a lawsuit filed June 3 in Monterey County Superior Court, the congregation said that even though the lease states that it has a right of first refusal to buy the property, the owners “went forward and sold the property” to Hayward Lumber, which operates a store next door to the Kingdom Hall.

The congregation wants a judge to void the “purported deed” from the sale of the property and an order allowing it to buy the property.

The congregation alleges “breach of contract, tortious interference with contractual relations, and civil conspiracy as a result of defendants’ wrongful conduct.”

Ownership disputed

The congregation contends that in March, the owners informed them they had decided to sell the property for $1 million cash.

While the Jehovah’s Witnesses said they would purchase it, the owners sold it to Hayward Lumber instead.

The property owners named as defendants are family members of the late Betty Storey Greene, the original land owner who first leased the property to the Jehovah’s Witness congregation in 1972. In 1995, Greene amended the lease an additional 30 years from March 2002.

Hayward Lumber is also named as a defendant.

The congregation’s lawyer, Crystal Gaudette, told The Pine Cone that her clients still occupy the premises and that meetings are held there seven days a week.

“As set forth in the lawsuit, the congregation disputes that Hayward Lumber now ‘owns the property,’” Gaudette said. “In any event, the congregation’s lease of the premises runs to 2032.”

Wright house topic of talk and tour

By MARY SCHLEY

IN A runup to the Carmel Heritage Society's annual House and Garden Tour, The Carmel Foundation will host a talk by preservation consultant Kent Seavey on the iconic Cabin-on-the-Rocks, better known as the Frank Lloyd Wright House, Wednesday, June 19, at 2:30 p.m.

Chuck Henderson — whose great-grandmother had the home constructed on the rocks above the south end of Carmel Beach in 1952 — is its steward and allows the public to visit it a few times a year. The house is listed on the National Register of Historic Properties.

Seavey's talk is free and will take place in Diment Hall at Lincoln and Eighth. For more information about the foundation, visit www.carmelfoundation.org.

The Frank Lloyd Wright house, along with Tres Pinos, Sea Blink, Harmony House, Spin-drift Cottage and Banyon Hideaway, will be included in the tour set for June 22 from 1 to 5 p.m.

The event is honoring the late architect Bob Littell, who designed Sea Blink, the Camino Real residence of city councilwoman Jan Reimers and her husband, Neils. Their two-story Craftsman-style home boasts beautiful construction and many details, and seems to have been on the property far longer than its 15 years.

On Dolores Street, tour goers will visit Harmony House, built by Bach Festival founders Dene Denny and Hazel Watrous in 1923. Don and Carol Hilburn bought the home in 1993 and undertook an extensive renovation in 2006. A large tree fell on it in February 2017, and disaster struck again the night before they were supposed to move back in when a fire started on June 1, 2018. The massive process of salvage, renovation and restoration that followed was finally finished more than a year later.

Architect Mark Mills, a student of Frank Lloyd Wright, designed the Banyon Hideaway at the south end of Mission Street as a spec home in the 1950s.

Tickets are $30 for members and $35 for nonmembers in advance, and $40 for everyone the day of the tour. Tickets for hop-on/hop-off shuttle are an additional $10. A reception will take place at First Murphy House at Lincoln and Sixth from 3 to 6 p.m.

Visit www.carmelheritage.org or call (831) 624-4447.

Fire lookout to be staffed by volunteers

By CHRIS COUNTS

LONG USED as a strategic vantage point for reporting wildfires, a United States Forest Service lookout atop Chews Ridge has been unmanned for decades due to budget constraints.

But in an effort to give firefighters a better chance of stopping the next blaze, the U.S. Forest Service is planning to staff the lookout again — this time with volunteers.

The volunteers are needed because the federal agency decided not to spend the money on employees to do the job — in part because of rising expenses, including the huge cost of fighting wildfires.

But prospective volunteers with an affection for electronic devices should beware — there's no electricity, cell phone reception or internet at the lookout, which sits at almost a mile above sea level.

The primary job of the volunteers would be to scan the horizon and notify authorities immediately if they see any sign of fire or smoke. As in many endeavors, every second matters to firefighters, so reporting a fire early can make a big difference.

If the plan comes to fruition, volunteers would work in pairs on shifts from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. They will be asked to work at least one shift each month when the lookout is in operation between May and November.

Besides the lack of electricity and internet, there's no running water, air conditioning or heating. And the nearest restroom is a mile away, but a plan is in the works to create a more convenient alternative.

So far, 25 volunteers have been recruited, and another 80 are sought.

Before becoming lookouts, volunteers must undergo six hours of training, and will need to join the Forest Fire Lookout Association, which costs $15 a year.

Built in 1929, the Chews Ridge Lookout sits atop a 12-foot steel frame and is located 9 miles along Chews Ridge Road.

A Cornerstone in Luxury Real Estate for Over 100 Years

Nicklaus: If I’d known there’d be a Tiger, I might have tried a little harder

By MARY SCHLEY

UNDER THE hot sun and in front of a couple hundred Pasadera club members and their guests Wednesday, award-winning CBS sportscaster and Pebble Beach resident Jim Nantz interviewed Jack Nicklaus, winner of 18 major golf championship tournaments, “the greatest living golfer of all time,” and designer of the course at Pasadera.

While much of the discussion was about his work there, with a U.S. Open getting under way on the other side of the Monterey Peninsula, the talk inevitably turned to the game that has been Nicklaus’ life.

“I love Pebble Beach,” Nicklaus commented. “I’ve said for years if I had one round left to play, I’d want it to be at Pebble Beach.”

He said he doesn’t play much golf anymore, since he’s far busier helping his wife with their nonprofit Nicklaus Children’s Health Care Foundation.

“Yesterday at Cypress, I was even par through 13 holes,” he said. “But I shot 79. The last five holes were not too good.”

Magic with a 1-iron

On Nicklaus’ major championships over the years, Nantz asked, “Is there one shot in those 18 victories that stands out the most?”

Nicklaus mentioned a few involving the difficult-to-hit 1-iron that most golfers rarely pull out of their bags. “Nobody even knows what a 1-iron is anymore,” he said. “I hit three of them that I think were my three favorite shots in golf.”

One was in the 1967 U.S. Open at Baltusrol Golf Club in Springfield, N.J., where Nicklaus was three shots ahead of Arnold Palmer and had his eye not just on winning, but on breaking the lowest score ever shot in a U.S. Open, Ben Hogan’s 276 strokes at Riviera in 1948. “I knew if I hit a 1-iron, I wasn’t going to spray it all over the place,” he said. “I carried the bunker and knocked it in and broke Hogan’s record” by a single stroke.

“All these things that you’ve done — in my mind, you’re the greatest player of all time,” Nantz said.

Wasn’t counting

Nantz was at Augusta National in 1986 when Nicklaus won his last major golf championship at age 46, and remarked how well he played. “To remember how to play and to be able to do that,” Nicklaus agreed, “I look back on it and think, ‘That was special.’”

“Do you ever look back and think, ‘I could have gotten to 22 or 25’?” Nantz asked. Nicklaus said he hadn’t even been in the habit of counting until a reporter approached him at a tournament and commented, “That’s 10, only three more to go to beat Bobby Jones.”

“I passed Bobby at Canterbury in ’73,” he continued, referring to his victory at that year’s U.S. Open. “I was only 33 and didn’t want to quit playing golf. I really didn’t have a record to chase.”

In 1980, when Nicklaus was 40, he won the U.S. Open and the PGA Championship, “and from that point on, I just played because I enjoyed it.” But if he’d known there was going to be a Tiger Woods — who has 15 major championships and said this week he’s giving himself 10 years to beat Nicklaus’ record — he added, “I might have tried a little harder.”

Nicklaus said he let up on competitive golf in order to spend time with his five children. “I would never trade one thing for the time I got to spend with my kids, to be part of their lives.” He now has 22 grandchildren.

He discussed how they came into their philanthropy. Their infant daughter kept choking and ended up in the hospital, where the physicians lacked a scope small enough for her tiny throat, and when they used one designed for an adult, it injured the girl and led to a bout of pneumonia. She survived, but the Nicklauses didn’t want any other parents or children to endure what they had.

“We have raised good money — a little over $100 million in the last 14 years,” he said, mostly through golf tournaments.

The heartwarming stories of success and the subsequent health of the infants and toddlers “are far more important than a 4-foot putt,” he said. “I love supporting Barbara. I meet a whole new bunch of people who have been interested in what we do and what we’re trying to do, and it’s fantastic.”

Getting golf course ready for U.S. Open is a years-long process

By MARY SCHLEY

UNPRECEDENTED RAINS throughout the month of May, and this week’s unusually hot weather, immediately followed by the Monterey Peninsula’s customary summertime fog, all added to how the tees, fairways and greens are playing in this week’s U.S. Open.

But preparation of the historic Pebble Beach Golf Links began long ago — as soon as the last Open here wrapped up in 2010, according to Pebble Beach Company Vice President and director of golf John Sawin.

For its big show, seen by 40 million people worldwide on television and another 265,000 fans in person over the course of the tournament, the course not only needs to look perfect, it must challenge competitors in just the right way. The transformation involves everything from updating parts of the century-old course that haven’t been touched much since they were built, to toughening up conditions so they are better suited to pressure the pros who make their livings playing golf — and the amateurs who would like to — rather than the resort guests who are looking for a memorable round in one of the most beautiful places in the world, but not one that will frustrate them so badly they want to hurl their clubs into the sea.

Years of planning

The Open marks Sawin’s first as a higher-up at Pebble Beach, where he arrived in early 2018 to replace RJ Harper, who died from pancreatic cancer in November 2017. But he’s no stranger to the game, having played golf his whole life and competed in numerous tournaments, including some significant USGA amateur contests.

“Preparation started with the last championship — we looked very closely at how we set the course up in 2010 and how each hole played — and then we make changes,” he explained. “Some of those might be larger capital projects. And as we get closer to the tournament itself, the way we prepare the course changes.”

Potential alterations are reviewed by the company’s board of directors. “We have an active board that takes great interest in our golf courses,” he said, and while famed golfer Arnold Palmer, a key financial partner in the company, has died, his design team still assists the company. “And any changes are done in close collaboration with the USGA. We all seem to be on the same page. Nobody’s trying to change the integrity of the golf course, we’re just trying to improve it where the technology allows.”

On the more significant side, four greens were rebuilt to improve drainage, and four tee boxes were altered, according to Sawin.

“They were original 1919 greens — they literally just pushed dirt around the way they wanted the green to be shaped,” he said. Over the course of four years, from 2014 to 2017, crews rebuilt the 9th, 13th, 14th and 17th greens to add modern drainage and other systems to help them survive another century. They also reshaped them.

“We went back and looked at photos of original greens in 1919,” he said. “We renovated the greens back to their original sizes. A lot of the time, they get smaller because the rough creeps in over time and no one really notices.”

That work expanded the greens in size by another 500 to 1,000 square feet, which Sawin said affords a few more options for where to locate the flags, too. “Pebble has some of the smallest greens on the PGA Tour,” he added. “That continues to be part of the challenge today.”

Regarding the work on the tees, about 10 yards were added at the 2nd Hole, and the 6th Hole’s tee was shifted to the left. “That accomplishes two things: aiming the player more toward the water on their tee shot, and allowing fans to walk along the side of the fairway, which they weren’t able to do before.” Improvements were also made to the 9th Tee and the 12th, which is now more elevated as a result.

Useful data

That the AT&T Pebble Beach Pro-Am, a PGA Tour tournament, is played there each year comes in handy, too. A high-tech system called ShotLink traces every single golf shot made during the tournament, providing tons of useful data, including which balls found the fairway, which missed and

CARMEL VALLEY TRANQUILITY

At the end of a quiet cul-de-sac, minutes from Carmel Valley Village, shopping and restaurants, stands a lovingly maintained home surrounded by well trimmed oaks with expansive views of the Santa Lucia mountains. Three bedrooms and three baths, solid hickory floors, open beam ceilings, stone fireplace, and custom cabinetry throughout. The home is surrounded by mature landscaping with drip irrigation and a 3 car garage includes workshop cabinets and countertops.

how badly, how many landed on the greens, and how each player scored. “That helps us hone in on where we need to make the course more difficult, and in some places, make it easier,” Sawin said. “For the U.S. Open, it comes down to how demanding we want the test to be.”

Only for the Open are the fairway widths narrowed, a process that takes about eight months. “In November last year, we started to transition some parts of the fairway into rough,” Sawin said. Crews maintained the longer grass at 2 inches in height until late April, when they started letting it grow longer. “They’ve been making sure it’s healthy and fertilized to ensure it stays healthy and will grow,” he said. “And once it reaches a height of 3 to 4 inches, we shape it to the height we want,” so that a golfer whose ball misses the fairway by just a few inches isn’t penalized nearly as harshly as one whose shot goes way off line.

Regarding the greens, Sawin said, no changes are planned for their surfaces, though they are harder, and therefore rolling faster, during tournament week. “The U.S. Amateur gave us a chance to do a dress rehearsal” for the greens, he said. “We feel like we have a really great game plan in applying that experience to the U.S. Open.”

Experts from all over

Finally, to protect the course and prepare it for competition, the company on May 6 started reducing the number of people allowed to play it every day. “It’s a gradual reduction. The purpose in May is to give our maintenance team more unimpeded time on the course to do projects,” he said. The course has a regular maintenance crew of 30 people. “And we have some interns that have already arrived to help us get ready, and then, just before the championship begins, we have 100 superintendents from around the world that come and volunteer their time to help us prepare the golf course.”

About 20 days out, the number of rounds played was cut significantly, to allow the divots to grow over and other scars to heal. A week before the tournament, Sawin said, “it’s less than half the play that we normally would have that time of year.”

Losing out on all those $550-per-person rounds of golf isn’t a great concern to the company, though. “There’s a lot of benefit to having the Open here, for business,” he said. “It’s the halo effect of hosting the National Championship.”

Baby owls recovering

By KELLY NIX

A BABY screech owl that was caught by a cat and another attacked by blue jays in upper Carmel Valley were rescued earlier this month and officials from the SPCA for Monterey County are caring for them, a spokeswoman for the organization told The Pine Cone.

The owls, found on June 2 and June 7 on private property in Carmel Valley, are being cared for by the SPCA Wildlife Rescue & Rehabilitation Center at the nonprofit’s facility off Highway 68 in Salinas.

“The little owl who was caught by a cat was suffering from lice and parasites but thankfully had no visible wounds,” SPCA spokeswoman Beth Brookhouser said Thursday. “He was treated with antibiotics and received lots of nutritious food.”

Brookhouser said the property owner found the feline playing with the baby owl, so he picked it up and brought it to the SPCA.

The second owl that was a victim of jays and was hypothermic when rescued, also had scabs and abrasions on his face and feet from the attack.

“He received the same treatment,” Brookhouser said. “After a week of care they are now eating on their own, which is a great sign.”

The owls will likely be in the SPCA’s care for another four weeks or more while they grow old and are strong enough to be released back to the wild to “fly free for the very first time,” she explained.

The wildlife center is currently caring for 20 owls, including Western screech owls, barn owls, and great horned owls. Every year, the wildlife center, which is funded through donors, cares for and treats more than 2,600 injured and orphaned wild animals.

quest time to fully understand and consider Cal Am’s expensive, energy-intensive project. Recent Stanford University studies using advanced technology show the proposed desal plant is likely to violate state and local laws and endanger the City of Marina’s water supply.

It is vital that our board of supervisors sets aside approval of Cal Am’s desal plant and asks for a supplemental EIR. There is now no urgency to build the $329 million plant. A better option, expansion of Pure Water Monterey, can be brought online in time to meet the state’s Dec. 31, 2021 deadline. Pure Water Monterey water can meet the Peninsula’s needs for decades to come and will cost one-third as much as Cal Am’s rooftop deck and apartments, objected to the preliminary plans enough to hire attorney Pam Silkwood to convey their concerns, including mass and bulk, loss of privacy and other issues.

Talk to the neighbors
Silkwood suggested her clients meet with Sillano to discuss the project before it progresses any further, and planning commissioners agreed that was a good idea.

Since it would be difficult for Pastor to comply with the parking requirement, given the lot is just 4,000 square feet, planning director Marc Wiener said he could pay into the city’s “parking-in-lieu” fund, which sets aside cash for public parking projects. The fund has a balance of $714,396.

Commissioner Christopher Bolton suggested Sillano lower the overall building height and make the ground floor’s street appearance less imposing. He also didn’t like the shape of the roof and said the courtyard could be larger and serve a public purpose.

A balcony on the front of the second floor also needs work, commissioner Gail Lehman said, as does the enclosure for the equipment on the roof that makes the building exceed the 30-foot height limit.

Commissioner Stephanie Locke said she liked the architectural style and that it would fit in well with the other buildings in that area, but she thought the windows on the ground floor would be too large.

“Definitely meet with the neighbors,” she said.
Chairman Michael LePage pointed out their review is “very preliminary,” and said the project is a “very nice” one that definitely fulfills the basic standard of being an improvement over the buildings on the lot now. He also suggested adding some mullions to the windows to break up the expanses of glass a bit.

oper said are “contextually appropriate.”
“The project retains the original factory portion of the building and character defining visual features, i.e., the distinctive sawtooth roof, large multipane windows and art modern elements,” the plans said.

A tree assessment for the project indicates that 97 mostly cypress and pine trees would need to be removed and two commercial structures demolished.

Comstock’s proposal comes after another developer promised a hotel at the American Tin Cannery, which is owned by Foursome Development Company. That project never got off the ground.

proposed desal. Hasty approval of Cal Am’s desal plant now could cost businesses and residents hundreds of millions of dollars, even if no water is ever produced, block the use of more affordable PWM water, and foreclose options for more affordable regional desal in the future. The supervisors need to fulfill their duty and request a supplemental EIR.

‘Amazing gesture’
Dear Editor,
We had 18 of our country’s finest young men come in to eat today in full military garb, just before they were about to be dispatched to an undisclosed place.
There was another table of six just adjacent to where the military group was sitting. They approached our general manager and asked to pay for the entire meal. What made it even more special is that this person asked to remain anonymous and to not let the military group know who paid for it. True altruism.
I can’t begin to tell you just how proud we are to be in the presence of these fine young men fighting for the rights of our country, but even more so for the gentlemen who made this amazing gesture.
We are proud to be a part of this amazing community that continues to impress with its unending support of our service men and women. Whoever this person was, kudos to you!

PINE CONE STAFF REPORT
CALLING ATTENTION to the many distinctive houses and shops that line the town’s streets, author and historian Alissandra Dramov will sign copies of her new book, “Historic Buildings of Downtown Carmel-by-the-Sea,” Saturday, June 15, from 1 to 3 p.m., at Pilgrim’s Way Bookstore.
Dramov delves into the many architectural styles that shaped the town’s character in its early days, including Romantic Revival, Tudor Revival, Spanish Revival and Storybook.
“Alissandra is a journalist, author, and historian, a former TV news reporter, anchor, producer and videographer,” Cynthia Fernandes of Pilgrim’s Way told The Pine Cone. “She supports historic preservation, and is the author of three history books about Carmel. Her newest includes many buildings which have never before been reviewed.”

and family. But by 8 p.m., Ekambaram was still missing, and recovery efforts ended for the night.

On Sunday morning, the dive team returned to the beach to continue the search, and Monterey County Sheriff's Capt. John Thornburg reported the divers found him at around 10 a.m. and turned his body over to the coroner's division.

The sheriff's office reminded people who visit Monastery Beach — which has had so many drownings over the decades that it long ago earned the nickname, Mortuary Beach — to stay away from the water.

"We've had several similar incidents in recent years," officials said. "As the warning signs read, there is a steep drop off and very strong currents."

James said the two families had passed one of those warning signs as they walked onto the sand from the northernmost end of the beach. They chose to lay their picnic high up on the shore.

"Duplicate signs are posted at all the Monastery Beach access points," he said. "State parks urges beach users to always closely supervise children, never turn your back to the water, and when at steep beaches — such as Monastery — stay above the sand berm."

The last fatality at Monastery Beach occurred in March 2017, when a 9-year-old boy was swept out by the waves, and his father tried to rescue him but couldn't.

A friend of Ekambaram's on Monday established a GoFundMe campaign for the family of the immigrant from Chennai, India, including his young wife and son.

By Thursday, 2,326 people had contributed $102,521 toward the $125,000 goal. Ekambaram was a senior software engineer at L&T Infotech.

WEEDS

Invasive plants are commonly found in Big Sur, particularly close to roads, where tires can spread unwanted seeds. Hikers also unintentionally bring seeds into the backcountry — via the undersides of their hiking boots.

In many places along the coast, exotic plants have spread out of control. Bixby Creek, for example, is home to an eerie landscape of invasive ivy which blankets nearly everything in its path. Near Lucia, pampas grass covers vast hillsides. And at other sites, genista continues to expand its range, crowding out a diversity of native plants.

to other companies with similar plans, which would further degrade the scenic beauty of the neighborhoods, she said.

And while an engineering firm working for Verizon submitted a report concluding the project complies with all FCC guidelines, Waffle said, their analysis didn't prove it.

Unified opposition

Many of the speakers and letter writers focused on alleged threats to public health from radio waves and mentioned recent studies about 5G technology, which Verizon is not proposing in this application, though several speakers speculated it was right around the corner. Federal law forbids local governments from using the potential environmental or health impacts of radio frequency emissions, which are ubiquitous, as a reason for denying cell towers.

Christy and Doug Hollenbeck, who live on Scenic Road and have been outspoken opponents of beach fires, claiming that wood smoke can have numerous horrifying health effects, made similar statements regarding Verizon's plans.

They said they were "immensely concerned and outraged" at the prospect.

"Wireless radiation has biological effects seen in all lifeforms, including animals, plants and insects. There is clear evidence of cancer, DNA damage, cardiomyopathy, neuropsychiatric effects, diabetes and mental health deterioration," they wrote in a letter. "How much money is the city being paid to erect these towers of death? Whatever the price, it's not worth the cost!"

They pleaded with the commission to "not turn Carmel into a giant microwave."

"People come to Carmel for the fresh ocean breezes," Christy Hollenbeck said at the June 12 meeting. "They don't want to be contaminated by microwave radiation."

Others focused on the aesthetics.

While Verizon representatives said the towers are needed to meet increased demand as people use their cell phones more and more, several speakers said they have no trouble with their Verizon service in town.

Commissioner Christopher Bolton commended Waffle for her extensive report, which outlined all the legal issues and the numerous justifications for denying the application. "These cell towers create a visual blight," he said. "They increase the mass of garbage up high."

"The data are not sufficient to justify this," agreed commissioner Gail Lehman. "I think primarily the legal justification for denying this application is that this is a nuisance on public roads."

Chair Michael LePage said there was simply "no way I could support this," given the conflicts with the city's codes.

They voted 3-0 to deny Verizon's application. Commissioner Stephanie Locke had to recuse herself because she lives near one of the proposed sites, and commissioner Julie Wendt was absent.

Claremont voters in 2014 overwhelmingly passed a ballot measure that would have allocated up to $135 million to pay for the city’s water system. The effort failed, and a judge ordered Claremont to pay the water company $7.6 million. The city also incurred millions of dollars of its own legal expenses.

“It is a huge risk,” Soneff told The Pine

After a judge issued a ruling in the Claremont case, Soneff said the city misled voters when it asked them to approve a bond measure based on the representation the city would produce water at lower rates, while the judge found the acquisition would likely increase water rates for more than 30 years, according to a news report at the time.

began to be published throughout the country. “I didn’t want to write about cancer ... but there it was, and it wouldn’t go away.”

Randy passed away in 1998 and Sharon took three months off work. The couple had booked a trip to spend their anniversary in Hawaii, and she went alone.

“I can grieve here or I can grieve on the beach,” she remembered thinking.

When she came back, she had a note from a friend telling her, “The challenge for you now, having lost your loved one, is to live a life that is honoring to his memory, while at the same time, that life moves forward.” Sharon felt she owed it to her children, her readers, and herself to press on.

Due to changes in management at the Herald, she left her job there in 2003 but continues to write her column, “Postcards from Home,” which runs in other publications.

In 2005, Sharon married Mark Whittington, a former colleague from the paper. The following year, he was offered a job in Vegas. When he approached her with, “You don’t really want to move to Vegas, do you?” she responded, “When doors open, you have to walk through them,” so the couple moved and lived in Vegas happily for 12 years.

By 2017, the pull to return home came in the form of grandchildren, and the couple moved back to P.G. and then to Carmel Valley. And she’s “Nana” to eight grandchildren — maybe the best job title of them all.

PUBLIC HEALTH GOALS REPORT PUBLIC MEETING

Date/Time: Tuesday, June 25, 2019, 5:30 – 6:30 PM PDT

Location: California American Water Business Office, 511 Forest Lodge Road, Suite 100, Pacific Grove

All interested members of the public or stakeholders are invited to review California American Water Central Division’s 2019 Water Quality Public Health Goals Triennial Report (PHG Report) and learn about California American Water’s water quality testing programs in Monterey. At the meeting, water quality staff will provide an overview and be available to answer questions about the report.

What is the Public Health Goals Report?

Public Health Goals (PHGs) are non-enforceable goals established by Cal-EPA’s Office of Environmental Health Hazard Assessment (OEHHA). They are equivalent to the Maximum Contaminant Level Goal (MCLG) established by USEPA. Water suppliers must prepare a special report for the public every three years to discuss those contaminants that have an existing Maximum Contaminant Level (MCL) standard and were detected at a level of above their PHG or MCLG during past three years. While the water quality results have been reported annually in the Annual Water Quality Report, the triennial PHG Report contains more information on health effects, available best treatment technologies and treatment cost estimates.

For more information, contact Dr. Jack Wang, Director of Water Quality and Environmental Compliance, at jack.wang@amwater.com or (831) 646-3269.

Costs vs. benefits

WHEN ELECTRICITY caused a fire that burned down the City of Paradise last fall, killing at least 85 people and destroying more than 18,000 structures, the public reaction was noteworthy: Nobody called for electricity to be banned.

But why didn't they? If used improperly, electricity is extremely dangerous — so dangerous that, according to a law firm that specializes in workplace electrocutions, it kills at least 300 utility and construction workers each year and injures about 4,000. On top of that, the National Institutes of Health says dozens more die in this country each year from other sources of electrocution, such as defective household appliances. And, as many people who've replaced switches or outlets at their homes know, one false move can get you a painful shock.

Meanwhile, faulty wiring, frayed extension cords and overloaded circuits cause hundreds of house fires every year in the United States — many of them fatal. Airplanes have crashed and automobiles have burned because of short circuits. When Apollo 1 caught fire in January 1967 because of an electrical failure, three astronauts were burned alive on their launchpad. As we were all painfully reminded during the Camp Fire last November, downed wires, failed transformers and broken insulators can spawn a conflagration that causes grievous damage. And don't forget that every power line and every electrical device in your home emits electromagnetic waves, which some people believe are dangerous.

So why not ban electricity? Because, despite its numerous and very familiar hazards, the benefits of having electricity around far outweigh its costs. So much so that, even in this activist-rich state, when Paradise burned down, nobody called for electricity to be banned. When they heard the news, everyone instantly made the necessary cost-benefit analysis in their head, and everyone came to the same conclusion: Don't ban electricity.

And therein lies a lesson for any number of current controversies, such as about cell phone towers and Roundup. To decide whether one of those things should be allowed, the first thing you have to do is find out how dangerous it is — and that is something that is not just a matter of opinion. It must be determined through scientific analysis of not only toxicity, but dose or exposure level. And after coming up with hard data about those things, the level of danger must then be weighed against the actual or potential benefits the thing offers.

Unfortunately, many people have a knee-jerk reaction against anything new, or when they hear a scary word like "carcinogen." If substance X can cause harm at a certain exposure level, they think it should be prohibited. However, not only doesn't anybody want electricity banned, they also don't call 911 just because they happen to catch a whiff of cigarette smoke.

As we report this week, the U.S. government may decide to use Roundup to help control weeds in the Big Sur backcountry, and a big cell phone company wants to install cellular towers in Carmel's residential neighborhoods. Should these things be allowed? Only a careful cost-benefit analysis can produce a meaningful answer.

Another death at the beach

Dear Editor,

A few years ago, I raised hell about Monastery Beach right here, and thanks to The Pine Cone some signs were indeed posted at the beach a few days later.

But it is still not nearly enough, as more have died since the too-small signs went up.

The signs look like generic warnings one might only heed on windy, rough-water days.

But the dangerous days are the invitingly hot and more calm ones. And who drowns at Monastery Beach? Innocent people from inland valleys and foreign lands who have no idea the danger they face on the innocuous-looking beach.

A friend who is an expert diver and instructor told me he too has almost drowned at Monastery Beach. The undertow and current are too strong to fight, and if you try to get back onto the beach sand, it keeps falling away.

We need huge signs, or the beach should be closed. No one is asking for seven-day-a-week lifeguards, but fencing and huge signs explaining the danger in real terms ... yes, please, immediately.

Jon Levy, Carmel

‘Despicable’

Dear Editor,

It is despicable another death has occurred on Monastery Beach this past weekend. Still no solutions to prevent these deaths. As I see it, these deaths are on the hands of the incompetent people of the California State Park systems who cannot devise a solution that will stop these deaths in their tracks.

At this point, why not erect a board on the beach that includes all the pictures of those that have died over the years on this beach as a memorial, and at the same time act as a real deterrent for people not to be so close to the beach and in danger?

The families have been torn apart in many instances right in front of them. If we knew the real number of those that have died there it would be sickening. Get your heads together and figure it out before another family is torn apart. The two red flags are not working.

Edward Chiorazzi, Monterey

Walking through open doors led her to rewarding places

SHARON RANDALL’S life has been defined by the opportunities that came her way. Her philosophy is that if a door opens, you have to walk through it to see what’s on the other side. She was born in Hendersonville, N.C., the second of four children. As a southerner, she said she was already a natural-born storyteller, but one of her brothers was blind and she said he taught her how to see the world, making her describe what she saw until he could see it in his head.

She wanted to attend college but didn’t know how she would finance it. It was beyond her family’s means and nobody in her family had ever gone. One day, Mr. Christopher, an elder in her church, told her he had signed her up to take an exam on a Saturday morning, so she showed up to the high school gym with a lot of other students to take it. As it turned out, it was a test for a scholarship, and a few weeks later, she learned she had received one for two full years at Gardner-Webb University in North Carolina.

Dazzled

Two years later, her boyfriend was drafted to go to Vietnam and wanted to get married. But she didn’t. So, they compromised and got engaged. When he came back, she broke up with him and knew she needed a fresh start. She called her aunt and uncle in California, and they told her she could stay with them. She worked all summer to buy her ticket and Peninsula for Randy’s job at Monterey High School as a teacher and basketball coach. The following year, they moved to a house on Walnut Street in Pacific Grove. Sharon took a job at the Salinas school district as a teacher’s aide. Their first son, Josh, came along in 1972. Two more kids followed, and Sharon became a fulltime mom.

An opening for a seasonal job at The Monterey Herald as a receptionist caught her eye years later, in 1982. It was summer, so Randy was out of school and could watch the kids. Sharon applied for the job and got it. When fall rolled around, another part-time job that worked with her kids’ school schedules opened up, so she took that, and then she took on a few freelance writing jobs. She worked part-time until her youngest had left for college.

In 1991, she was asked to write a column for the Herald. She thought about what to write and remembered the words of her grandmother, “Never pretend to be someone you’re not or know what you don’t know.” “So, I decided I would write about what I knew: life and matters of the heart,” said Sharon. People loved it. But then she had to do it again and again, every week. “How am I going to come up with something new every week?” she asked herself. Her editor advised her to make a list of all the things she could think of to write about. She did and put it in her desk drawer, but has never had to use it. “If your job is to write about life and you pay attention to what comes along, you’ll never run out of things to write about,” she said.

In 1994, Randy was diagnosed with colon cancer, but kept teaching and coaching as he went through treatment. That same year, Sharon’s column was nationally syndicated and

It started as an excuse to take a walk

PHOTOGRAPHY BEGAN as a way to unwind the mind for Michael Kent Lynberg, who was an author and full-time corporate writer when he began wandering off the beaten path to breathe fresher air, exercise his body and appreciate the local landscape.

“For me, it started as a way to get away from the meetings, the PowerPoint presentations, the writing, and have a quick, little abeth Lynberg, who runs Gallery-by-the-Sea Monday through Friday, with her husband taking charge on weekends. “That’s usually my opening to wander over, tell them they’re both right, and explain Mike’s technique to them.”

Lynberg uses innovative digital-art software to “paint” his photos, enhancing or adjusting color, contrast, lighting, shadows, and other nuances. The effect can be transformative.

“You and I could stand side by side and take very similar photos, but if we start using these tools on those images, we’re each going to come up with something completely different,” he said. “There are hundreds of brushes to choose from — different sizes, with different bristle strengths. You choose how much paint to put on the brush, how much the colors bleed, which direction to go with your brush strokes ... and all of those parameters guarantee a different effect.”

Special interest

The result are eye-popping landscapes, seascapes, sunsets and snowscapes.

Eighty percent of the art showcased at Gallery-by-the-Sea is the work of Lynberg, but the gallery also represents traditional photographers Bart Keagy, Evan Schiller, John Henebry and Stuart Readman, as well oil painter Shelley Cost.

All five, with Lynberg, are known for work depicting Pebble Beach — especially the famous golf course — and have been officially licensed by the Pebble Beach Co.

Those works — particularly art of the golf course — are alluring to visitors year-round (the wife of PGA legend Lanny Wadkins bought one of Lynberg’s photos for her husband’s Christmas present), but are expected to attract special interest this week, with tens of thousands of people descending upon the Peninsula for the U.S. Open.

adventure,” he said. “If you take your camera, you’re on a hunt, but it’s a hunt for beauty. I like to say that I’ve walked almost every square foot of this coast, including maybe some places where I shouldn’t have gone.”

Lynberg was writing internet articles for the software company Adobe about a dozen years ago when his path took a creative detour, thanks to a writing assignment that brought him into the firm’s PhotoShop labs, where he discovered some of the aesthetic secrets that power much of today’s movie industry.

“I got exposed to a lot of things that can be done with photography that most people don’t know about,” he said. “I had no idea until I started doing interviews with these movie industry people, and it really opened my eyes to the possibilities.”

Creating debates

What Lynberg discovered were digital techniques, using sophisticated computer software to transform a photograph into something that looks a whole lot like a painting — so much so, in fact, that his artwork often spawns disagreements between visitors to the gallery Lynberg and his wife opened in 2013 on San Carlos Street between Fifth and Sixth avenues.

“I’ll often overhear a couple standing in our entryway, debating whether they’re looking at a painting or a photograph,” said Eliz-

Gallery-by-the-Sea, Michael and Elizabeth Lynberg’s art gallery, is home to many of Michael’s photo/paintings. He creates the landscapes — often of familiar spots — with the aid of computer software.

The Morrow Farm, Ed Haber, Pebble Beach and the 1972 U.S. Open

WHEN I introduced this column in April, I stated, “The history of this area is all the more amazing when one sees the connections.” Hang with me in this column, while I connect aviation pioneer Charles Lindbergh to the 1972 U.S. Open in less than six degrees of separation.

A few weeks ago, I wrote about Charles Lindbergh’s much publicized 1930 trip to the Monterey Peninsula, and his exploits over the coast and Carmel Valley in a glider. According to the late Ed Haber, who built Quail Lodge, Lindbergh made later trips of a personal nature. For many years, Lindbergh’s brother-in-law, Dwight Morrow, lived in Carmel Valley, and Lindbergh, a noted isolationist, would visit and enjoy the relative seclusion, Haber said.

Morrow was the younger brother of Anne Morrow Lindbergh and grew up in a wealthy New England family. The pressure to succeed was apparently hard on the only son and namesake of his father, who had been an ambassador and U.S. senator. Morrow was just 20 when he was hospitalized with a nervous breakdown in January 1929 — reportedly from over-studying while at Amherst College, his father’s alma mater. He recovered and, as a senior, was voted by classmates as “most likely to succeed,” the same honor his father received in 1895.

After graduation, Morrow served a year as an instructor and assistant to the president of Amherst College before attending Harvard in the fall of 1934, and then Yale Law School in 1936. In 1937, he married Margaret Loines at her family’s expansive Seven Gates Farm on Martha’s Vineyard. The couple initially made their home in New York City, where son Stephen was born in 1939, and daughter Faith in 1940.

But Morrow’s health sent the young family west, and in 1941, they bought a 160-acre dairy farm in Carmel Valley. Morrow found it similar to the state-of-the-art dairy farm operated at his wife’s family estate on Martha’s Vineyard. He maintained one herd of Jerseys and another of Guernseys.

Nevertheless, having a gentleman dairy farm on the Vineyard was quite different than living on one in an isolated part of the California coast. His wife didn’t care for it at all. She divorced Morrow in 1948 and returned to New York with the children, who by then included Constance, born in Carmel in 1943.

Morrow provided tours of the dairy farm to local school groups and around 1950, Haber chaperoned a tour with his children. An avid golfer who won the 1933 City Championship in San Francisco, Haber looked around the rich farmland and saw the potential for a golf course. Not knowing who was giving the tour, Haber announced, “Boy, I sure would like a place like this someday.” That wasn’t the day.

Morrow also introduced French educator Gaspard E. Weiss to the beauty of Monterey County. In 1955, Weiss founded the Monterey Institute of Foreign Studies (today’s Middlebury Institute of International Studies). Morrow served on the board of directors of the institute for several years.

Deciding to sell

Leaving management of the dairy to a partner, Morrow spent much of the early 1950s in the East. He began teaching at Lincoln University in Pennsylvania and handled his mother’s estate after she died in 1955.

He finally finished his Ph.D. at Harvard in 1956. He continued to split his time between Carmel Valley and Pennsylvania until his death in 1976.

Remembering Haber’s remark from a decade earlier, in 1960 Morrow asked if he was still interested in buying the farm, then 245 acres. Gary Koeppel tells the full story in “The Legend of Quail Lodge” (2014), but to make a long story short, Haber bought what was once an active dairy farm and, with the assistance of golf course designer Robert Muir Graves, transformed it into Carmel Valley Golf and Country Club, which opened in the summer of 1964.

Struggling with traffic

In 1965, the new course received a nod from the USGA when it became the Northern California regional site for U.S. Open qualifying. More significantly, soon after the first 25 guest rooms at Quail Lodge were completed adjacent to the golf course, golf legend Arnold Palmer discovered the fledgling resort. Palmer, like Lindbergh, enjoyed the relative seclusion of the property, but traffic between Carmel Valley and Pebble Beach during the annual pro-am became a challenge.

At the 1971 Crosby, Palmer nearly missed his tee time. Despite that, both Palmer and Gary Player requested reservations at Quail Lodge a year ahead for the week of the 1972 work that the loves to do. If he is fortunate in finding something that is congenial, then he will be a success.

Over all, I feel that I have been as lucky as anyone can be. From the time I started in business 60 years ago, I have always been working in the line of endeavor that I felt I was equipped for and thoroughly enjoyed. I have had men in my employ who worked much harder than I did all of their lives, and then retired on a pension and with what few savings they were able to make. Work was drudgery. I have always felt sorry for men that looked forward to retirement. It seems tragic to me that people have to slave doing something they do not enjoy merely to live. I turned down an offer when I was still fairly young for a job that would have probably made me a very rich man, but it was a line of work I did not like. The offer was flattering in the extreme. However, I never regretted for one moment my decision to stay with what I enjoyed.

‘A certain amount of courage’

I should say that in almost any business, one of the requisites of success from a managerial standpoint is finding the right kind of men to work with. I have always studied every branch of the business that we have which, for a small company, covers a lot of ground. I have always known every branch of the business thoroughly enough to know when it is being well handled, and I have always tried to find somebody that could handle each department better than I could. After that I promoted team play and enthusiasm and a spirit of cooperation among the heads of departments. This I think has a great deal to do with the success of any operation.

More than any one quality, imagination perhaps is a requisite for success. It also takes a certain amount of courage to try new things, but if you don’t advance, you are going to fall behind. “Leave well enough alone” is not a good maxim for any business. Mistakes are inevitable and one must learn to profit by them. It is necessary to always give credit, sometimes where it is not entirely due, and take the responsibility for mistakes sometimes for which you are not responsible. This all adds up, again, to team play and the promotion of mutual confidence. I have been exceedingly fortunate, not only in getting the right people, but in having their complete loyalty.

Don’t forget the peanuts

Back in my football days I learned early that a team, with every man involved in every play, was far more successful than the team with one or two stars who were inclined to take all the glory themselves. I followed the same principles in business. No one man is ever responsible for the success of his company. It is a matter of teamwork; the boss plans the play and calls the signals. A good team will win more often than the sensational individual with a lot of slaves under him.

Our efforts are to produce a package that means a good time for others. If you are working at something that adds to the joy of living of other people, and if your efforts are toward creating something that otherwise wouldn’t exist, you are indeed a fortunate person.

Many very smart men in business have failed miserably in hotel operations because they tried to apply the principles of economy that made them good manufacturers. When one manufactures a sack of cement and the sack of cement is standard, one can only compete by producing it just as cheaply as others, or more cheaply.

Circus men and hotel men are apart from other businessmen. A full house can be run very extravagantly and it will make lots of money; a half-full house can be run with the greatest economy and it loses money. It is akin to a three-ring circus. If you fill the big tent you make a great deal, but if you try to save money by cutting out the elephants because they eat too many peanuts, you won’t get the customers!

It sounds a little boastful, and perhaps some will shake their heads when they read this, but my objective, in connection with Del Monte Properties Co. particularly, was not primarily to make money. I wanted to do a good job. The money factor was incidental — although I didn’t duck it!

If I have a philosophy of life, it is to get the most out of every day. Remember the past only as it may influence the future. Learn from past experience and from the experience of others, and don’t worry if you can’t help it. This is advice that is easy to give, but not easy to take. Everyone makes mistakes, and everyone on occasion, particularly in youth, makes a complete jackass of himself. To worry about it can be very damaging and cause a lot of unnecessary misery.

When one becomes introspective, the best of all cures is to think what one can do for others. The difference between the most brilliant man alive and a man of even less than average intelligence is not very great. The one who constantly tries to be of help to others is often far happier than the one who achieves great success. The most pathetic person in the world is the one who takes himself too seriously.

Sometimes I think that the lowest measure of success is wealth, and that the most successful person is the one who achieves real happiness. This is usually the result of helping others to be happy.

In his home above the 2nd Hole at Pebble Beach in 1957, Morse enjoyed painting at his easel.

Principal lesson: Work hard, do your best, and be willing to go to Plan B

THE PRINCIPAL of Carmel River School is an example to his students (kindergarten through fifth grade) that hard work and determination can create a pathway toward the loftiest dreams, but he also shares the other part of that equation:

Peninsula Sports

By DENNIS TAYLOR

Life isn't a fairytale, and the dreamiest of dreams don't always come true.

"I talk to kids all the time about persevering and showing grit in pursuit of their goals, but I also consider that in a different context: How many of us actually attain our dreams?" said Jay Marden, who just completed his 16th year as head administrator at the little school behind the Carmel Mission. "How many of us will find it necessary to shift our thinking at some point and set different goals? When you don't attain your dream, is that it — do you throw in the towel and aspire to nothing else?"

Don't misunderstand: He's not throwing a wet blanket over the dreams of children, but alerting them to the possibility that stuff happens. Circumstances often will alter a person's trajectory and send them on a different path life, and, at that point, it's OK to re-channel your energy.

Running at Berkeley

Decades went by before the longtime educator felt comfortable sharing how he learned that lesson. Marden was one of the best high school runners in America. He ran the mile in a lightning-fast 4 minutes, 30 seconds as a freshman at San Jose Mission High, where his father, John Marden (a world-class miler himself in the mid-1950s) coached both track and cross country. As a junior, Marden won the national championship in cross country, and he was state runner-up in the 2-mile as a junior and senior.

Bill Dillinger, who coached the best distance runners in the nation at the University of Oregon, personally flew to San Jose to offer a full-ride scholarship — a deal Marden turned down. He was in love with his high school sweetheart (Suzanne, a French teacher at Carmel High, and Jay have been married for 30 years, and raised three athletic sons: Sean, 28, Ryan, 25, and Connor, 20) and didn't want to spend four years that far from home. So he ran at UC Berkeley instead.

At Cal, he became one of the fastest middle-distance and distance runners in school history (he still ranks sixth all-time in the 5,000 meters, seventh in the mile, and ninth in the 1,500), and then earned a spot on the Grand Prix Pro Circuit, competing internationally, all expenses paid.

Marden remembers those as good and interesting times — he and a couple of Finish runners were stopped at gunpoint by Soviet military police one night after accidentally driving too close to the U.S.S.R. border — but he says running at a world-class level was never fun.

"The whole sport is about pain," he said. "It's all about seeing how fast you can get from Point A to Point B, and so much of that comes down to how much pain you’re willing to endure. Your mentality is that you can’t let it get the best of you, so it becomes a negotiation between making peace with the pain and quitting.”

For the top runners in the world, quitting is never a reasonable option.

‘Fastest debut’

In 1984, he qualified for the U.S. Olympic Trials in the 1,500 meters, but couldn’t keep pace with the best in the U.S., so by 1988 was specializing in the 5,000. And then something remarkable happened.

“I competed in my very first 10,000 meters that year, and ran 28:00.3, which turned out to be the fastest debut ever by an American in that event,” he said. “And that immediately made me a favorite to make the U.S. Olympic Team.”

Marden was ranked No. 2 in the U.S. in that event by the time he went to the Olympic trials in Indianapolis, where the temperature on the track on race day was 120 degrees. He was among the leaders, in position to become one of three runners who would represent the U.S. at the Olympics in Seoul, South Korea, when Marden’s body began to fail him.

“I started to black out every 10 meters or so during the last mile,” he remembered. “I’d go black, come back to consciousness, then black out again. Finally, with 250 meters left, everything went dark, and I woke up in the hospital.”

Marden had become dehydrated, and his body’s core temperature had risen to levels so dangerous that doctors were concerned that his brain might have been damaged.

When he was released the following day, he turned to his father and made an observation that only a tunnel-visioned athlete would consider: “Pops, I know it’s a longshot ... but I’ve also qualified to run in the 5,000.”

Two days after his blackout, Marden was at the starting line in 110-degree temperatures for the first of three heats in the 5K. He finished in the front half of the pack to advance from the quarterfinals.

In the semifinals, incredibly, he finished in second place.

Singer-songwriters create buzz at Folktale winery, Henry Miller Library

LIKE A number of up-and-coming singer-songwriters, Connor Cherland — who plays Thursday, June 20, at Folktale Winery in Carmel Valley — isn't content to simply play an acoustic guitar. Instead, he brings along an assortment of devices, and loops guitar riffs and percussion that make him sound like more than just a solo performer. "You're likely to wonder how so many sounds can come from just one man," Ashleigh Poland of Folktale Winery said.

When he takes the stage at Folktale, the Santa Barbara-based musician will share songs from his latest recording, "The Choices of John Still," which came out last fall. Poland described the album "a mash-up of indie rock and singer-songwriter storytelling" with "catchy melodies, distorted vocals, and beautiful harmonies." Showtime is 4:30 p.m. Also playing this week at Folktale are singer-songwriters

Ranch’s cheesemaker, Rio’s summertime sips, and Feast of Lanterns help

THE NEW Market and Creamery — where longtime Palo Colorado resident Charlie Cascio has become “resident cheesemaker,” transforming milk from his half-dozen goats on the property into four different soft cheeses, with hard cheeses on the way — are the culinary focal points of a recent overhaul at Carmel Valley Ranch.

At The Market, guests and members of the public can grab a baked treat and an espresso, prepare a picnic basket with all sorts of nuts, fruits, fresh goods and condiments, sip wine while munching on some freshly made snacks, and participate in various demonstrations and tastings. A high-top table and a long bar accommodate those who want to linger.

Right around the corner, and visible through a large window, is the Creamery, where Cascio makes cheese and is teaching a few workers the art, too.

For years, Cascio raised goats and made cheese at his Palo Colorado ranch — where he also tended bees, fruit and olive orchards, and an abundant garden, with interns to help — but lost most of it in the Soberanes Fire in 2016. He managed to get all of his goats out, though two later died of smoke inhalation. Several months later, the remaining six went to live at Carmel Valley Ranch, where executive chef Tim Wood convinced one of the owners it would be an excellent idea for the resort, which specializes in hands-on experiences for its guests, to have goats.

“I was very attached to them, and I knew this place would give them the best home,” he said. The plan also included Cascio, who has been in the culinary field for nearly five decades, starting with making cheese in the Alps in 1972, and spending 10 years in France, becoming resident cheesemaker by the end of that year.

Cascio later worked as head chef at Big Sur’s Esalen Institute for 16 years, and wrote its cookbook.

Setbacks, management changes and other variables interfered, but his small creamery finally got built, and Cascio became a full-timer at the ranch three weeks ago, as did the part-time crew hired two years ago to tend the goats.

“I’m in cheese production now, which is one of my passions, and I’m also teaching cheesemaking,” he said. Cascio has had to recreate his recipes, which were lost in the fire, and plans to develop new ones, too.

Cascio and his crew have made four different soft cheeses so far: chevre, crottin, feta and Valençay, the distinctive pyramid-shaped cheese.

Honey and lavender

From there, he hopes to also produce hard cheeses, which require much more time to age. In Palo Colorado, he made a Caprino Romano with four colors of peppercorns, a Gruyere-style cheese with fenugreek spice, and a Spanish Manchego-style cheese brined in wine and coated with honey and lavender.

Cascio said the ranch is also starting what he referred to as the “goat experience,” where guests accompany the goats as they graze on the hillsides, watch them get milked (or even learn

■ Sam Smith in the Village

Sam Smith, whose main job is making wines for Morgan, also has his own operation, Samuel Louis Smith wines, and will be sharing his wines and talking about them during the next session of the Village Wine & Tap Room's Winemakers Series Saturday, June 15, from 2 to 5 p.m.

While he oversees production of 35,000 cases of a wide range of wines for Morgan, Smith's own operation is far smaller, turning out just 500 cases per year. He doesn't have a tasting room of his own, so the Village Wine & Tap Room — which seeks to share wines from small producers that don't have tasting venues — carries some of his bottles.

Smith says he aims to make "honest wines of balance, freshness, and finesse," with sustainably farmed grapes he buys from vineyards as far south as Santa Rita Hills in the Santa Barbara area, to the Santa Cruz Mountains in the north.

During the tasting, which costs $20 per person and includes small bites, Smith will share his 2017 chardonnay from Santa Rita Hills, 2017 pinot noir made with fruit grown at nearby Albatross Ridge in Carmel Valley, and 2017 syrah from Corralitos near Watsonville. The Village Wine & Tap Room is located in the strip of businesses at 19 E. Carmel Valley Road.

■ Beergarden open for season

The beergarden at the Trailside is open now until Halloween. Guests can order anything they want from the Trailside menu to enjoy al fresco in the garden between 4 and 9 p.m. Fridays, noon to 9 p.m. Saturdays, and noon to 6 p.m. Sundays. Each evening also features live music from various local performers, and the beergarden is available for rent for private parties, too.

Owner Sean Allen said he also recently launched Rib Night on Tuesdays from 6 to 9 p.m. (or when they sell out), with a half rack of pork ribs, shoestring potatoes and corn available for $16.95.

The Trailside has a wide ranging list of beers and ciders on tap that changes regularly, as seasonal beers and limited-quantity items come and go. "We have the coast covered, from San Diego, to San Francisco," he said. "Our beers are always special."

For more information and details, visit www.trailside-cafecv.com. The café is located on Del Fino Place in Carmel Valley Village.

■ Help the Feast of Lanterns

Kevin Phillips, managing partner of the Beach House at Lovers Point in Pacific Grove, decided to help the 113th Feast of Lanterns by donating $1.50 to the nonprofit that runs the summertime festival for each Sunset Supper sold during the month of June.

Sam Smith, winemaker for Morgan, also produces his own wines and will be pouring and talking about them at the Village Wine & Tap House Saturday.

A brand new very old beer

The chance find of an 80-year-old Monterey Beer can sparked what became a three-year project for JC Hill, cofounder and director of brewing for Alvarado Street Brewery. The beer, produced by the short-lived Monterey Brewing Co., intrigued him enough that he wanted to research the company’s history, find the beer’s original recipe, and reproduce it.

Alvarado Street’s Monterey Beer, which bears the same design as that 1930s-era can, was released last month and has found its way into restaurants and markets all over the Monterey Peninsula.

“About three years ago, we officially began the project; along the way, we connected with relatives of the Monterey Brewing Company to hear more about the story of Monterey Beer and its founders, Armin Neubert Sr. and his son, Armin Neubert Jr.,” he said.

An article written by Gary Flynn on brewerygems.com details the interesting history of brewing in Monterey County in the 1800s and early 1900s, starting with the Salinas Brewery in 1874 and following its successors through success and failure, Prohibition, tragedy and bankruptcy. Monterey Beer was first made by Salinas Brewing & Ice. Co, which, following the death of its principal in 1937, was recreated by the man who took over as the Monterey Brewing Company. It didn’t survive the tight economy of World War II, with a contract to produce beer for soldiers at Fort Ord coming too late to save it, and the brewery closed and was converted to the Salinas Freezer-Storage Co. in 1942.

‘Top Gun’ brings high-stakes aerial drama to the forest

PINE CONE STAFF REPORT

A HOTSHOT pilot with a reckless attitude and a cocky demeanor battles his colleagues and Russian planes in the film, “Top Gun,” which plays Saturday, June 15, at Forest Theater.

With Tom Cruise playing the pilot, and Val Kilmer portraying his rival, “Top Gun” was the highest-grossing film of 1986. It also marked Cruise’s first success as an action star.

Featuring Kenny Loggins’ Top 10 hit, “Danger Zone,” the film’s soundtrack remains one of the best selling ever.

Besides “Top Gun,” the theater’s Films in the Forest series also includes “Mamma Mia!” (June 22), “Second Hand Lions” (July 10), “Field of Dreams” (July 16), “The Big Lebowski” (July 17), “Grease” (July 18), “Pets” (July 19) and “Princess Bride” (July 20).

Showtime is shortly after sunset, which will happen about 8:30 p.m. Tickets are $10 for general admission. The theater is located at Santa Rita and Mountain View. For more details, visit foresttheaterguild.org.

Also visiting the library this week are singer-songwriters Bill Callahan and Meg Baird, who share the bill Monday at 7 p.m.

With a surplus of gifted singer-songwriters touring at any given time, it’s not hard to find talented musicians playing in small venues — and there’s always the outside chance you see the next Bob Dylan or Joni Mitchell in the making. “With so many singer-songwriters, it’s hard to get to the top, although many are deserving,” Toren added.

The library is located on Highway 1 in Big Sur. Call (831) 667-2574.

Hill said he and others worked hard to get the design of their homage to Monterey Beer just right — and they did. Unfortunately, while the art was there, the recipe was not.

“All brewing records were impossible to find, so we settled on an all-malt, refreshing light lager that’s 4.5 percent alcohol by volume,” said Hill, who described the brew as “crisp and dry, and perfect for any occasion — beer-flavored beer.”

Monterey Beer sells for $8.99 per six-pack at Alvarado Street’s Salinas brewery/tasting room and the pub on Alvarado Street in Monterey, and can also be found at Grove Market, P.G. Bottle Shop, Bruno’s, Surf N Sand, Lopez Liquors, Crossroads BBQ, Brophy’s and the bar at La Playa Carmel.

■ And a very local honey beer

The crew at Carmel Craft Brewery teamed up with Carmel High School student Jake Reisdorf of Carmel Honey Co. to create a special brew from local wildflower honey. Homegrown Honey Kölsch, 6.5 percent alcohol by volume, is light and crisp, brewed from German malt and hops, and 6 pounds of wildflower honey. It is only slightly sweet and has very low bitterness.

The first batch ran out quickly, so the brewery decided to do a new batch, with which Reisdorf helped — even though he’s (country rock, Saturday at 7 p.m.); and singer-songwriter Nicholas Leahy (Thursday at 7 p.m.). In Carmel Square at San Carlos and Seventh, (831) 626-3400.

Cowgirl Winery in Carmel Valley — still too young to drink.

“Jake came by last Friday to help us brew up a new batch,” Michael Smith said. “It’s going to be one of our main beers for a long time.”

Find the beer in Carmel Craft Brewing’s tap room at the Barnyard shopping center. It’s open at 3 p.m. on weekdays (except Tuesdays, when it’s closed) and at noon on weekends, and always has a number of interesting beers, all made by brewer Marco Herrera, on draft. Homegrown Honey Kölsch sells for $5 for a 9-ounce pour.

■ Big Little Wines Bingo

Capitalizing on the second season of HBO’s “Big Little Lies” by giving people more reason to watch it — and drink local wines and beers while they do — the Monterey County Vintners & Growers Association developed Big Little Wines Bingo. Because the series is set here, many local wines and beers appear as props.

The group developed five different bingo cards with all of the products that pop up in the show, and people are encouraged to download the cards, buy some of those featured wines and beers, and watch, marking off squares and then swirling and sipping each time a local product appears.

The first person to get Bingo gets to keep or finish the rest of the bottle that’s open at the time.

For the cards and “rules,” visit <https://montereywines.org/big-little-lies>.

MORE SPORTS

In the finals, with an Olympic berth on the line, Marden admits he was worried.

“I was actually fearing for my life a little bit, and maybe that fear dictated the race a little bit too much for me,” he said. “I got sixth place, and didn’t miss the top three by very much.”

Should he have pushed harder? Could he have pushed harder? Those questions haunt him even today, at age 56.

“Our society measures such a sport by your Olympic participation. I had a pretty good career outside of the Olympics, but it’s the Olympics that count, as far as the public is concerned. And watching some of my friends go to the Olympics without me made it even harder,” he said.

“I have no delusions about my career, but I realize I didn’t come close to reaching my potential as a runner, and that stings,” Marden added. “Realizing that you didn’t achieve your maximum potential stays with you, and it’s with me to this day.”

Four years later, Marden was gearing up for a run at the 1992 Olympics, taking cortisone injections in an Achilles tendon to relieve pain.

“Finally, the doctor said, ‘Jay, if I shoot that tendon one more time, it might just dissolve ... but if I cut off part of your heel, it could relieve the pressure,’” he recalled. “So I had the surgery, but it ended my career. I was never able to run again.”

With that part of his life abruptly behind him, Marden struggled to cope — “I felt like my whole identity was wrapped up in the sport,” he said — but at the same time he was falling hard for a new passion.

“I was working as a substitute teacher, discovering that I absolutely loved teaching children,” he said. “That’s really where my love for the field of education started.”

Primed to learn

In retrospect, he also finds roots in the fact that both his mother and father were educators. (His brother, John — two years older, and a former track standout himself — also became a teacher.) And Marden says there’s nowhere he’d rather be than Carmel River School.

“I’m a really big believer that if kids are rolling out of bed and they can’t wait to get to school, that’s half the battle. They’re going to be primed to learn,” he said. “I think we provide a world-class education here, but our kids also are very blessed. They’ve got a computer lab, a science lab, the children’s garden, project-based learning, physical education, and extracurricular experiences, like, for example, the environmental club. It’s such a cliché to say we’re focused on the whole child, but it’s so true.”

All-Americans in lacrosse

Carmel midfielder Luke Melcher and Stevenson defenseman Alex Murray were named to the U.S. Lacrosse Central California-area All-America team, an honor bestowed upon the top players in area on the bases of superior skills and techniques, exceptional game sense and knowledge, and good sportsmanship.

In addition, Carmel’s Benjamin Lund earned Academic All-America status, which honors players who exhibit exemplary lacrosse skills, good sportsmanship on the field, and high standards of academic achievement in the classroom.

Famous paintings offer inspiration and become canvases for C.V. artist

MANY ARTISTS use the work of the masters as inspiration for their creative journeys. But Carmel Valley painter Ken Hale goes a step further by taking copies of famous paintings and turning them into canvases for his work.

An exhibit of Hale's paintings, "A Laying of Time," is on display at Winfield Galley, which will be the site of a reception for the artist Saturday, June 8, from 5 to 7 p.m.

By CHRIS COUNTS

In an example of Hale's work, a faded image of Hieronymus Bosch's gloriously bizarre "The Garden of Earthly Delights" provides the backdrop for a floral painting that's included in his show.

"It's a wonderful riot of color done in gouache, which is an opaque watercolor," gallery owner Chris Winfield told The Pine Cone.

"What's in the distance is historical, and what's he's doing on top of it is contemporary," he added.

The display continues through July 8.

The gallery is located on Dolores between Ocean and Seventh. Call (831) 624-3369.

■ Expert talks about 'risky art'

Buying art can be very rewarding, but it also carries risks because values can be very subjective, and fraud does exist in the industry. An expert on the subject, Carmel art advisor Lily Yu, will delve into the topic when she presents a talk and Q&A, "Buyer Beware: 6 Ways to Avoid Risky Art," Thursday, June 20, at the Monterey Museum of Art.

The talk starts at 7:30 p.m., and is free for museum members and $10 for others. The museum is at 559 Pacific St.

■ The secret world of agave leaves

By studying the interplay between light and agave plants in his Carmel Valley backyard, photographer Mahir Agha reveals a secret world of color and form.

A show of Agha's images closes Saturday after a month-long run at the Testarossa Winery tasting room in Carmel Valley.

The son of businessman Nader Agha and the older brother of one-time Pine Cone contributor Laith Agha, the photographer is also a local real estate appraiser.

"He's super smart, talented and is a master at transforming backyard agave leaves into psychedelic prints on metal," said Biz Eischen, who manages the tasting room.

The tasting room is located at 1 E. Carmel Valley Road. call (831) 298-7726.

Carmel Valley painter Ken Hale's "Cascade" is included in a show at Winfield Galley, which hosts a reception for the artist Saturday.

“The opportunity to share the beauty of this area with visitors from all over the world was a big part of our inspiration for opening this gallery,” Elizabeth said. “People fall in love with the sights they see, and they want to take a piece home with them.

“We also feel like our price point is accessible to a larger audience,” she said.

Indeed, Lynberg’s large photo art is typically priced at $495. His portfolio also includes scenic photos from the San Mateo Coast, San Francisco, Yosemite, and Aspen.

Some of his more recent creations are abstract, a new frontier of creativity for Lynberg.

“They’re experimental right now — I’m not marketing them yet — but I’m using filters, special effects, and Photo-Shop tools,” said Lynberg. “Some of my abstracts start with intentional camera movement while holding the shutter open for a half-second or so.”

Lynberg’s creative instincts were on a different trajectory through his school days, into his college years, and beyond. The Palo Alto native earned a degree in creative writing at UCLA. He wrote full time in Los Angeles from 1975-92, and spent two years in Spain teaching English as a second language. He headed to Boston after he was accepted into Harvard Divinity School, where he earned a master’s degree in theological studies.

Over the years, he authored multiple books, mostly non-fiction, on topics that included self-help, public health, and sports.

Boston is where he met Elizabeth, a New Jersey native, whom he married in 1997 and brought to the Monterey Peninsula for a visit in May 1999. They moved here that October.

A borrowed machine

Opening the gallery 14 years later was a leap of faith for the Lynbergs, whose two sons (now 20 and 17) were in high school and middle school at the time, but it was also a calculated move: Mike took on extra writing assignments until he had saved enough money to pay the rent on the business for a full year.

Encouragement that they had made the right move arrived immediately after they opened the doors on their first day of business in August 2013.

“We sold two pieces in the first half-hour,” Elizabeth remembered. “We had to use our neighbor’s credit card machine to ring up the sale because we didn’t have one yet, but I think that was when we started feeling like, ‘OK, we can do this!’”
